FLAG ETIQUETTE
When Dewey's fleet returned to New York over the Battle of Manila Bay, a Swedish janitor in a large department store hoisted an American flag with the Union down, and flew the signal of distress throughout the celebration. A patriotic citizen would hardly have made so flagrant an error, but in displaying flags or bunting there are many fine points to be observed, remarks Harry Lee King, deputy commissioner of Boy Scouts. In the New York Tribune he gives these rules for flying the national colors:
1. The proper time for raising the flag is sunrise or after, never before sunset.
2. The flag must be lowered at sunset.
3. In draping the flag against the side of a room or building, the proper position for the blue field is toward the north or toward the east.
It is a mark of disrespect to allow the flag to fly throughout the night. There is no uniform usage in the display of bunting, but it is just as easy to hang it in correct fashion. When buildings are decorated in bunting draped horizontally, the red should be at the top, according to a letter from the war department published in the New York Sun. There are no regulations prescribing the method of utilizing bunting for decorative purposes, but good taste requires that the order shall be red at the top, followed by white, then blue, in accordance with the heraldic colors of the national flag.
