THE ART EXHIBIT

There are about seventy-five attractive pictures, including water colors and other paintings in the exhibit in the art gallery. The water colors are especially attractive. Among these there are a number by foreign artists, especially Italians.

The collection of pictures covers a wider range historically than any exhibit the gallery has had. An example of the very old type is "Calling the Ferryman," by Ridgway Knight. The picture is valued at $3,000. There is also a very characteristic picture by Inness, "The Woodland Interior," which portrays an excellent study in browns.

There are two canvasses by Waugh, one of the greatest marine artists in the country. Bucklin's "Moonlight in the Adirondacks," is another of the well known and valuable pictures of the collection. Included in the exhibit are Irving Couse's "In Ambush," and a small "Sleeping Fawn," by Rosa Bonheur.

This collection is a very excellent one and students will not regret any time spent seeing it. The gallery is open from 9 until 5 o'clock.

AN ERROR

The Daily Nebraskan is very glad to correct an error in Friday's issue. We stated that Dr. Clapp came to Nebraska as head of men's department and that at that time the men and women's departments were separated. The University catalog of that time does state on one page that Dr. Clapp was director of men's gymnasium while a woman was director of the women's gymnasium. Several pages ahead in a separate section of the book Dr. Clapp is given as professor of physical education while the director of the women's gymnasium is adjunct professor. We sincerely regret the error.

SOCIALISTS AND THE WAR

J. E. LeRossignol

Socialists are in principle opposed to war, but in practice they are not much belligerent than other people. For less years they have talked about the "general strike" which was to crush war in its initial stages; but when the world war broke out most of them took sides with their own country, and only a few extreme theorists were able to keep their theoretical balance. The war of words was over, for the sword had been flung into the scales.

If socialism had been indigenous to America, the outbreak of war would have found most people of that stripe lined up with their fellow-citizens in defense of American rights and of the American conception of human liberty. Unfortunately, socialism is a foreign product, for the most part made in Germany, and we find many socialists siding with their native land against the land of their adoption; and many others, though not actively disloyal, practicing their acrobatic internationalism while the world is aflame.

As might have been expected, the war has caused a wide division in the ranks of the socialist party in the United States. At the St. Louis convention in April, 1917, a majority report was adopted denouncing the government of the United States for entering the war and recommending that socialists obstruct the conduct of war as much as possible. They are advised to oppose conscription, military training in the schools, the issue of war loans, and the export of food, and to carry on the class struggle even more vigorously than before. The majority report received 141 votes, while the St. Louis report, justifying the war, received only five votes.

However, the minority opinion has gained in strength as the issues of the war have been more clearly perceived. From the beginning it was supported by socialists of the American type, such as Charlotte Perkins Gilman,

William English Walling, Upton Sinclair, William J. Ghent and Charles Edward Russell; and the threats of the majority, including Marris Hylquit, Victor Berger and Adolph Germer, have not been fully carried out. A few quotations from a protest issued on the eve of the convention will indicate the attitude of the minority:

"We feel that the present opposition of the socialist party to national defense is contrary to the interests of democracy and contrary to the hitherto accepted views of the international socialist movement. We are for peace, but not at any cost; and believe that the sacrifice of integrity and of general public and private self-respect is too high a price to pay for it. Our country belongs to a family of nations and must assume its share of responsibility for the maintenance of just international relations. To refuse to resist international crime is to be unworthy of the name of socialist. It is our present duty to the cause of internationalism to support our government in any sacrifice it requires in defense of those principles of international law and order which are essential alike to socialism and to civilization."

THE FORUM

The Daily Nebraskan will print in the Forum signed communications addressed to the editor but assumes no responsibility for the same. The editor reserves the right to reject all articles deemed unnecessary. The Nebraskan believes that free and open discussion is beneficial and for that reason welcomes communications on timely subjects from both students and faculty members. The signature of the writer may be had upon application to the editor, but will not be printed if so desired.

Complete Election of Girls' Club Board Today

Election of members of the Girls' Club board, begun yesterday, will be completed today. The ballot box was to be opened this morning at nine o'clock but no definite information can be secured until the counting of the ballots is completed. The voting is being carried on at a table in the library.

Judges Pawnee City and Beatrice Debate

Prof. George N. Foster was judge of the Pawnee City-Beatrice debate at Pawnee City, Friday evening, a contest in the Southeastern District of the Nebraska High School Debating League.

CONVOCATION

Mr. Will Owen Jones, editor of the Nebraska State Journal, will speak at Convocation at 11 o'clock this morning in Memorial hall. His subject is "Getting the News in War Time." Stereoptican views will be shown. It is well known that getting and printing news in these stirring times is not as easy as it appears on the surface and Mr. Jones' tale of his difficulties should be very interesting.
