PAN-AMERICAN

The fact that before the war Germany was decidedly much nearer to Latin America than we were, because Germany had taken greater pains to study and understand Latin America and to meet her needs than we had. More lines of mutual interest ran from Latin America to Germany than to the United States.

Since the war began German agents have bought great stocks of raw materials in South America. They have striven with every sort of propaganda their ingenuity could suggest to hold all the country to the south of us as a field for future German trade and exploitation. Germany will be wanting foreign trade, when war ends, as no country really wanted it before.

We shall have the capital. We shall have the ships—for the first time. We shall have the manufacturing capacity. We shall be wanting much closer trade and political contact to the south than ever before. War has given us a great opportunity to make the word America a term of common interest in a way only vainly dreamed of before; but only an opportunity. To realize it will require broad planning and persistent effort.

And the key to it all is mutual understanding and mutual service. We want Latin America to understand us. We want it to know all about American goods. We want to reap profits there. The first word, in getting Latin America to understand us, is for us to understand Latin America. The way to sell more goods there is to buy more. The way to find a profit is to discover a useful service to be performed.

To broaden and tighten our relations with Latin America and to counter all American propaganda, the first and pretty nearly the last word is to find out how useful we can be; how much and in what ways we can serve Latin-American interests. The services we render will be the measure of those we receive. It is our cue now to take the initiative and see how much we can profit Latin America. That is the key to countering German propaganda. The profit to us will follow as a matter of course.—Saturday Evening Post.

"Can any little boy," asked the new teacher, "tell me the difference between a lake and an ocean?"
 "I can," replied Edward, whose wisdom had been learned from experience. "Lakes are much pleasanter to swallow when you fall in."

"HONEY" DRAWS THE LINE
 I've beamed when you hollered, "Oh Girlie!"
 I've hopped when you bellowed, "Oh, say!"
 I've fallen for "Dearie" and "Missus,"
 And everything else till today.
 But there's one thing that's got to be different,
 From now till the Great War is done—
 Unless you're prepared for a riot,
 You've got to quit calling me "Hun!"
