Nebraska Freely Gives Her Sons To the Cause of World Freedom

It is morning of the most glorious Thanksgiving day ever known. All peoples the world over are rejoicing and giving thanks that they have been liberated from the clutch of militarism for all time. And Nebraskans, scattered far in strange lands, are brought closer home on this day by the bond of appreciation for the part their Alma Mater has played in the winning of the war. The university was called upon to give and she did give, her buildings, her money, her co-operation with the government, and her men. When the summons came, they laid aside their books said good-bye to home and friends and went to serve as best they could.

In the spring of 1917, while the university was spending its vacation at home, the president of the United States declared war on Germany. When the university reopened on April 11th, the registrar's office was flooded with applications for withdrawal from school. The boys enlisted in every branch of the service and very soon the campus took on an air of desertion, for in about three weeks after the call for volunteers came, more than a thousand lads had left to serve their country, some headed towards the training camps, some toward the farms and some immediately bound for over-seas ports. They went, wherever they were sent only too anxious to get into the thick of the fight, and help to down the tyrant. And they went in such numbers that now in addition to the 2,500 S. A. T. C. men stationed here the records in the office which are still incomplete, show that over two thousand Huskers are in the service of Uncle Sam.

General Pershing a Cornhusker

The greatest of all Cornhuskers is the man to whom the world turns today with thankful heart, a man of unequalled genius, devotion and patriotism, the commander of our expeditionary forces abroad, General John J. Pershing. Nebraskans have always considered General Pershing a Nebraskan. He was a first lieutenant in the United States army when, from 1891 to 1895, he was acting as commandant of the cadet battalion and military instructor in the university. At that time he made his home in Lincoln, and it was here in the university that he took his first degree of bachelor of science in 1895. "There is no doubt," says the World-Herald, "that General Pershing's service in the university was one of the most important in his life."

Andrew Emmett Anderson, B. Sc., of Lincoln died October 11 1918, of pneumonia in the Jefferson Barracks of the influenza. Walden Cornell Arendt, ex-'13, of Lincoln, died of pneumonia in the aviation camp, Garden City, N. Y., last September.

David Dean Barrett, ex-'19, of Omaha, who enlisted in the navy in the spring of 1918, trained at the Great Lakes station during the summer and was later transferred to Nebraska for further training, died in Lincoln, September 27, 1918, after being ill with pneumonia.

William Lloyd Davis, A. B., '08, son of Mrs. D. D. Davis, 821 So. 15th St., Lincoln, was accidentally killed while boxing in camp. He sustained a fractured skull from a fall and later died. He was a private in the Marine corps and was stationed at Mare Island, Vallejo, Calif., at the time of his death on April 8, 1918.

Francis Louis DeBrunner, A. & S., ex-'20, of Lodgepole, Nebr., stationed with the 335th Infantry, Co. A, was gassed in action August 28, and died September 9.

Fletcher Lawrence Farley, LL. B., '13, died in a hospital in France of wounds received in action. He left his home in Bancroft, Nebr., to enlist in the U. S. Marines in February, 1918, and for awhile was stationed at Paris Island, South Carolina. He landed in France June 8, and was shot while trying to rescue his officer.

Joseph C. Flaherty, son of Mrs. Mary Flaherty of Dixon, Nebr., who was a special student in the law class of '18, died in a Lincoln hospital, October 18, while at home on a furlough.

Arthur Henry Marsh, a chaplain with the third battalion, 18th Infantry, A. E. F., was killed while administering to the wounded soldiers on the battlefield, October 7, 1918. He graduated from the university in 1905 with an A. B. degree and was the first Rhodes scholar to be sent to Oxford University in England. He will be remembered as having been on the toast list at the Phi Beta Kappa banquet in 1917. He left Omaha, where he was rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church in July and was killed about four months later. His father is the Rev. A. E. Marsh of Blair.

Lieutenant Grosvenor Phillips Cather, son of G. P. Cather, Bladen, Nebr., was killed in action with the infantry in France, May 28, 1917. He was of the class of 1908.

Lieutenant Edward Eugene Cook, A. B., ex-'20 who was with the 168th Infantry, Co. C, A. E. F., was killed on August 4, 1918. Cook attended the university from 1915 to 1917, was first O. T. C. at Fort Snelling, Minn., and was staff correspondent for The World-Herald while there. Later he was sent to Camp Dodge where he was an instructor. He was the son of Ernest E. Cook of Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Lieutenant Charles Wright, ex-'19, of Council Bluffs, Nebr., died in France on October 11, of pneumonia. He enlisted in the field artillery branch of the service about a year ago, and was sent to France after a short period of training in the south.

Francis Lawrence Farley, LL. B., '13, died in a hospital in France of wounds received in action. He left his home in Bancroft, Nebr., to enlist in the U. S. Marines in February, 1918, and for awhile was stationed at Paris Island, South Carolina. He landed in France June 8, and was shot while trying to rescue his officer.
