Husker Warriors Celebrate

Resume of

That old Spaniard, F. Lou Enza, has been the grand old trouble maker of the 1918 football season. Not content with planting a colony of germs in every camp in the country, and crippling football elevens with sickness and even death, he threw a monkey wrench labeled "Made in Germany" into the machinery of the entire nation. Nebraska University came out of the wreck in a sadly twisted and contorted condition.

Out of a schedule of six home games, the Cornhuskers finally completed two of them as originally billed and their out of town numbers were completely wiped off the slate. The athletic management was ever up in the air over the constantly changing situations. As the regular season is drawing to a close today, there are still dickerings for post season games not yet completed.

When the government took over control of the Missouri Valley sports, October 1, long football trips were placed under a ban and the Nebraska-Syracuse match set for Thanksgiving day was called off. Another long jaunt to West Virginia university was abandoned as impractical and the Huskers never did get to see foreign soil thruout the season.

Huskers Bow to the Hawkeyes

The Iowa Hawkeyes invaded Lincoln, October 5, before the epidemic had taken a very firm root, and humbled the Cornhuskers by a 12 to 0 score. The veteran Iowa players outplayed the less experienced Nebraska eleven especially in the third quarter when the visitors put across their two touchdowns.

The Hawkeyes showed the Huskers up in nearly every department of the game. They advanced the oval 214 yards to Nebraska's 164 and they put up a bitter brand of work generally. Hubka and McMahon battled with Lohman and Sykes for individual honors.

Notre Dame Cancels Game

The war department issued a ruling against any long trips during the month of October and the Nebraska management received a wire October 7, that their game with Nebraska for the nineteenth would have to be cancelled. The next day an agreement was reached whereby the two teams' would mix November 2 and so the affair hung for nearly a month.

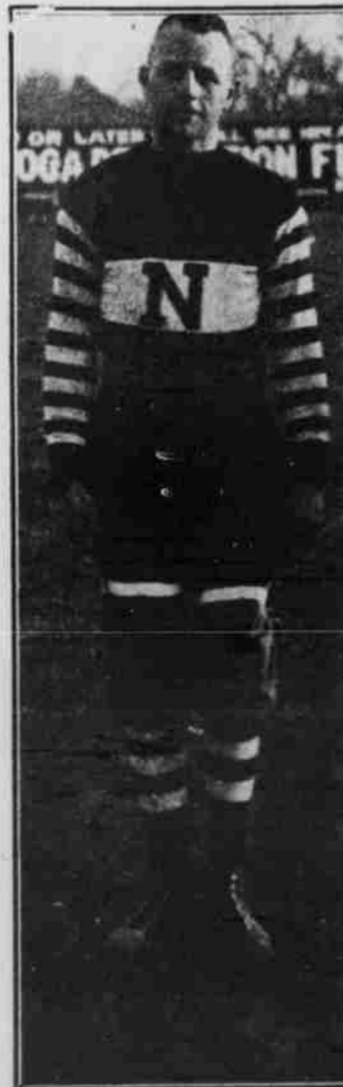

The Camp Funston game was simultaneously cancelled by the commandants of both posts on account of the influenza conditions.

An agreement was reached for the Nebraska Notre Dame game to be staged November 2, the day the ban was to be lifted, but when the appointed day rolled around, the lid was still clamped down tight in Lincoln and the Hoosiers were headed off just in time.

Director Scott had been trying to land an opponent for Thanksgiving ever since the Syracuse game was
