Mrs. R. G. Clapp, head of the women's physical education department, and her daughter, Miss Margaret, are both ill of the influenza.

ALUMNI

Helen Redington, '05, who has been teaching school in Fresno, California, expects to start for France soon. In a letter received by Miss Chaiken at the alumni office, she tells of her plans.

Fresno, Calif., Nov. 19, 1918.

The University Journal,
Lincoln, Nebraska.

Dear Miss Chaiken:

I seem to have lost touch with the University Journal after I transferred my services from Port Angeles, Washington, to Fresno, California. I am glad that this last copy followed me up and found me out. Teachers are the true nomads, I half believe, and I am about to prove that again, for I am leaving for France in a few days. Will the Journal follow me there? I hope so. If you will address me 4 Place de la Concorde, Paris, France, care of the American Red Cross, I shall receive it, I think. Since Fresno is granting me a leave of absence, next year will probably find me back here again, and by next year I mean, of course, the next school year.

Most sincerely,

—Helen Redington, '05.

HAND GRENADES

"Yes, you got an invitation to a Thanksgiving dinner. Several days before, your appetite for mess relaxed, in anticipation of the feast. Thursday morning you woke up bright and early. The heavy snowfall did not mar your enthusiasm. After an all-morning frantic search through the barracks for discarded pieces of military attire, and after much fussing and cussing, you were finally dolled up for the memorable occasion in a pair of spiral leggings, a navy blouse, size 12 hob-nailed shoes, a pair of 1913 edition of R. O. T. C. trousers, and a sombrero with a green hatcord.

Sometime in your youth your mother had taught you the value of courtesy, and you decided to be polite to the hostess. On your way to dinner, you repeated over and over the formal greeting, "Good morning, Mrs. Jones." But somehow or other when reaching the place designated, you lost your usual self-control. The fact is you were bashful. Instead of saying very early, "Good morning, Mrs. Jones," you stuttered out, "Good Jones, Mrs. Morning." You were ushered into a strange room, and told to wait until you were called. Of course, that was very easy, for falling in line and patiently waiting was about the only thing you had ever done while in the army. You stared at the novel surroundings. The environment was entirely different from what you had been used to during the past two months. Instead of the usual sight of scores of bunks, and groups of so-called soldiers playing poker, checkers or pitch, you were in the midst of refined, cultured people, the citizens of Lincoln. Presently you were aware of fragrant odors issuing from the direction of the kitchen. Your first thoughts were of a gas attack, but on second reflection you recognized the flavor of good things that mother used to make. No wonder you couldn't resist the temptation, when the time for dinner was announced. With the primitive human instinct of the survival of the fittest, intensified by two months of army life, you forgot all your manners. Bolting across the room, with your usual mess time shout of "gangway," you elbowed your way through the crowd of guests, grabbed a platter, and started around the table. No mess sergeant was in sight, so you had no difficulty in getting three pieces of cranberry pie, four dishes of sauce and a pumpkin pie down in your pocket, before you realized that you were once again eating with civilized people. With an apologetic "Marden me padem" instead of "pardon me madam," you relinquished your claim to the spoils, and took your place among the guests. You missed your chair when asked to sit down, spilled the gravy, and committed several other atrocities of social etiquette. In your haste to get around for seconds, you forgot to masticate, and swallowed a whole turkey leg, bones and all. Of course, you missed your regular ration of murrhys and Heinzes' 57 varieties. As you gazed across the table, you couldn't help but admire the spread, and cram down plateful after plateful of goodies. There were pies of endless variety, choice cuts of duck and goose, delicate morsels of dainties that would have tickled the palate of a king. It was a feast fit for the gods. You were reminded of a banquet, and instinctively got up to make a speech, only to be unceremoniously jerked back into your chair by another rookie who shared alike both your joys and humiliations. You complimented the lady of the house on her cooking and her excellent punch. Later you found out that you had been drinking out of the finger bowl. In short, you disgraced yourself as usual. You finished eating after all the other guests had retired to the parlor, and the dishes were washed. The three spoons and two forks which were still unused, you retained for souvenirs. The people were very hospitable, and in spite of your frantic efforts to get away to fulfill your evening date, you were persuaded to stay for supper. The end of the perfect day found you in the infirmary, where the physician's stomach pump and various obnoxious concoctions, once more made you feel at ease.

uniforms and other equipment would be furnished the student soldiers, and

Whereas, in the preliminary contract between the university and the war department the express statement is made that "the war department will provide uniforms and necessary personal equipment of the soldiers to the extent practicable," and,

Whereas, the military authorities at the University of Nebraska have repeatedly stated that such equipment had been ordered and was expected daily, and,

Whereas, it is now rumored that such equipment arrived in Lincoln but has been sent back to the quartermaster's department at Omaha, and,

Whereas, under a Washington date line the newspapers state that student soldiers will be allowed to wear their uniforms four months after demobilization, and,

Whereas, if uniforms be not furnished to the soldier students before demobilization the good name of the university will be placed in jeopardy, therefore, be it

Resolved, that it is the sense of the senate of the University of Nebraska that a strong representation should be made by the university authorities to the war department to secure if possible the entire fulfillment of this real or implied agreement.
