"Ark Light"
When Noah gathered the beasts and birds And stored them in the Ark, And sailed for forty days and nights On a deep sea, cold and dark, We've wondered what they did to keep Their spirits up to snuff;
But the learned world has shook their heads It's a problem sure enough.

But I've chanced to meet a feller Who is collar high in wit, Tho' he hasn't given all the facts He's cleared it up a bit;
For he's told me, looking eye to eye
And a knowledge far ahead That one of the facts he's figured out,
And this is what he's said:

"During the days and nights of storm And the constant splash of rain When the Owls rejoice and prayed, The dark
Of the nights would never wane, I've often mused why they didn't play pitch
To sharpen their wits, a speck But no, my son, fate willed it not For Noah sat on the deck".

NOTHIN' P'TICKLER
By Jeff Machamer

Could you fancy anything as being funnier than an intoxicated man in a revolving doorway?

If the pen is mightier than the sword is the typewriter mightier than the tank?

What has become of the old-fashioned young man who used to go to his vest pocket to get the correct time?

Most people seem to think the world's a cafeteria with every one breaking his neck to serve himself.

Why doesn't Henry Ford send an expedition to Lincoln with a view toward getting the boys out by Christmas.

Our mother sent us this poem. We think it one of the best we've taken time to persue.—Hope it strikes you in the same manner!

The greatest man this country ever produced was'n't great—he was only good, which is far better than to be great.

If justice were always visible on earth there would not be so much necessity for a just heaven to even things up.

In building state roads it seems that graft comes higher than crushed limestone, and is not nearly so free from dirt.

STEWART IS BACK
AMONG HIS BOYS

tice will commence in dead earnest this afternoon at 5 o'clock. The equipment is arriving and those players who show they have promising ability will be issued suits. There are a great many men around this camp who have varsity stuff in them and have not yet shown up at the practice.
The door is always open for new men and they will be welcomed to the field.

HAND GRENADES

Making Your Own Environment
The other morning you read that a person is affected by his environment; that to have a beautiful character, one must have beautiful surroundings. Unlike most things that you read, the thought stayed with you. That noon you gave your room an optical once over, and therein found nothing conducive to the beautification of charcter. With such a hideous array of dark brown furniture it was not strange that your room mate was often disagreeable—the wonder of it was that you had not been blighted by its malignant influence.

You decided that the furniture must be painted. Your room mate was not very enthusiastic about it, but finally aid she would help. There followed a long and heated argument as to whether the paint should be white or apple green in color, but since you are of an unselfish nature you let your room mate have her way and consented to the prosaic white.

The next day the two of you donned big aprons and began the struggle.
You scorned the suggestion of the girl who insisted that you sandpaper the furniture before painting it, but many a time in the trying hours that followed you wished that you had heeded her words. Firstly you applied a prime coat which gave a dark blue tinge to the ancient chairs, venerable bed, archaic table and passé chiffoniers. A second coat, which you plastered on to the thickness of at least an inch, paled the dark blue to an azure hue. And need I add, that the paint smelled horribly for two days while it was drying?

At the end of these two days you put on two coats (in some particularly brunette spots, four coats) of ultraodiferous enamel, and despite your utmost efforts to wield the paint brush with a legato movement, the streaks were many and conspicuous.

Painful indeed were the hours that followed which the paint was drying, and you continually came in intimate contact with it. Painful indeed were the weary and back-breaking moments you spent with a knife scraping from the floor the paint which you had spilled. Likewise those moments you spent restoring the scraped floor to its original luster by means of evil-smelling oil and much energy. But none—may not one—were so painful as the one when a friend viewed the finished products, and solicitously inquired as to when you were putting on the second coat.

Beauty of character—how can it be?
