DAILY DIARY RHYMES

By

Gayle Vincent Grubb

By Gayle Vincent Grubb.

St. Peter yawned a weary yawn,
And sighed a weary sigh;
His keys, all rusted and out of date,
Were hung on a nail close by;
For the Pearly Gates stood open,
And a steady line filed through,
Silent and grim as a churchyard tomb
Or a deacon's front row pew.

The entry book was crowded full
Of names from East and West;
St. Peter's fingers ached with pain,
And he longed to take a rest;
Yet on and on from the world below
In a never ending line,
They came, and saw, and entered
within,
With never a word or sign.

St. Peter stroked his bearded face,
And singled out a youth:
"My son, this throng amazes me,
I hanker for the truth.
What causeth all this march of souls
That passeth on and on?
I crave what facts are yours, my son,
For my judgment's dead and gone!"

"St. Peter," spoke the earnest youth,
A quiver in his voice,
"The world below is stricken with plague,
And a mortal has no choice;
One-third of those who've passed
within
All hail from one abode,

The same as I, they've lugged their share,
But it's been a heavy load.

"Take my advice, and call a halt,
But a single plan, I see;
To close the books and give a chance
To poor humanity,
That they may fight the dreaded scourge,

With a hand on the guiding oar,
Or this march of souls that file in now
Will file in more and more."

St. Peter mused and arched his brows,
When the earnest youth had left;
"The world below lacks judgment,
All their wisdom is bereft,
The youth speaks well, I'll write a note,

For schools must call a pause;
This place is large, but it's filling fast,
And now I know the cause."

The following letter was received at the Alumni office from C. A. Fisher, '98, who is a consulting geologist and fuel engineer:
Miss Annis Chaiken,
University of Nebraska,
Lincoln, Nebraska.

My Dear Miss Chaiken: I do not know whether you are aware of the fact that Roy Vernon Patch, of '98, is a lieutenant-colonel with the American expeditionary forces in France, and at the last account was in command of three regiments. Lieut-Col. Patch's last letter informed me that they were making things very interesting for the boches.

With best regards,

Truly yours,

C. A. FISHER, '98.

Germany even directed her soldiers to shoot up defenseless statues. Can you beat that?

Leonard Kline, back from a training camp in the south, via the New Orleans Item, states that he was mustered in on Tuesday and mustered out on Wednesday, which, as he puts it, was "too much mustard."

Even Radio, the post's dog mascot, has the "flu."

The only part of our uniform that actually fits, is the blue hat cord. That, perhaps, is due to its portability.

Pay-day had an unwelcome touch of civilian life to it. As soon as we were handed our hard-earned mazuma, we left the Armory in very muchly elevated spirits.—But as soon as we reached the outside, the creditors, whom we've acquired in the past two payless months, were riding merrily on our neck.

REMEMBR THE girl we told,
YOU ABOUT in a bunch of lines,
THAT LOOKED like this last week?
WELL, SHE SAW our little story,
AND HAS INVITED us to eat,
XMAS DINNER at her house in
THE SMALL town that has,
PAVED STREETS and everything,
WE HAVEN'T won her love,
YET BUT SHE has at least,
THOUGHT OF OUR stomach and,
THAT IS GETTING close to our heart.

Have you been initiated into the IN FLU ENZA'S?

The only time we'll ever feel sorry for the Kaiser and his Clown Prince is when they get mad at each other.

"Give me Life, Liberty, or Death—but deliver us from Influenza!" is the way it should have been said.

Men interested in work during the holiday season, report to Prof. A. A. Reed, 203 Administration Building.

Private: "Which end of the line does Sgt. Morris guide?"

Voice: "The end headed for the mess hall."

"Toots" Schuman elected himself Company Commander Thursday morning, as did Booker and Rixleben. Several new movements were explained and executed. Yea, "executed" in more ways than one.
