

OPPORTUNITY TO VIEW FAMOUS MASTERPIECES

The rare opportunity of seeing some wonderful canvases is open to university students from today till the twenty-second of February. Carol Beckwith's reproductions of famous masterpieces are now on exhibition in the Art Gallery in the Library.

Velasquez, Reubens, Nattier, and many other famous names are included in the exhibit. The canvases are very large, and the copies very trustworthy.

This exhibition is of special value to college students, as it gives them a knowledge of the old school of painting. It is fortunate that a painter like Beckwith, who is one of our greatest artists, should reproduce the old masters. Most of the exhibitions now available to college students and others have been of the modern period. All students will feel well repaid for spending some extra time viewing these marvellous pictures.

The exhibition will be sent to the normal schools of the state, under the auspices of the School of Fine Arts.

Next Sunday the Art Gallery will be open to visitors till 10 p. m. Music by the Steckelberg orchestra will be given at 3 and perhaps at 4:30. The photographs of the original paintings are also in the exhibit.

W. A. ROCKIE RETURNS TO THE UNIVERSITY

assignment of the government. He will not only remain here during Professor Bengston's absence, but perhaps next year as well.

Mr. Rockie was very prominent in university circles five or six years ago, and will be remembered for his participation in school activities. After his graduation here he entered the employment of the bureau of soils, with headquarters at Washington, D. C., and remained in this work until the latter part of 1917. This work took him into Texas, Georgia, Louisiana and other southern states in the winter season only, but he has worked in nearly every state in the Union, during the summer months, his work taking him largely into the middle and western states of Wyoming, Idaho, Utah and Oregon, where he worked in the mountain regions.

With Geological Survey

Since the beginning of 1918 Mr. Rockie has been in the service of the United States Geological Survey, and has, during his whole post-university career, specialized in field work.

His work in the mountainous western states was largely the opening up of small mountain valleys for homesteading purposes, within a generally limited forested region. These valleys, being better suited to agricultural uses than to the minor industries, were opened to settlement and Mr. Rockie had much to do with accomplishing this end.

This extensive work with the government equips him admirably for his future work at the university, because of his practical experience. Mr. Rockie's work for the remainder of the year will be on the whole class work, but next year it is possible that he will have charge of the work in the field survey department.

DISCUSSION OF PRESENT DAY PROBLEMS SUNDAY

All men students of the university are invited to take part in the discussion of Present Day problems, to be held Sunday at 3 p. m. in the Orpheum theater, February 16. Morris W. Folsom will talk on "Lessons From the War." The Liberty Day parade picture will be shown and will be followed by singing led by H. O. Ferguson.

This is a nation-wide movement and the committee for these community meetings in Lincoln is especially anxious that the student body take active part in the discussions following the presentation of the vital subjects which will set forth the problems of the day. Building on the principles heretofore stated, the Forum has been a success in many cities. Why not in Lincoln?

POLITICAL SCIENCE ENROLLMENT LARGE

The class in Political Science 2, which deals with the study of state governments, and meets three days in the week at 8 o'clock in the morning, had an enrollment at the beginning of the semester of nearly 145, over 120 students of which are still registered in the course. Professor Senning reports that this is the largest second semester class in Political Science that has been given in many years, and incidentally is, at present, one of the largest classes in the entire university.

C. J. Lehmkuhl Injured—C. J. Lehmkuhl, '19, an assistant in the School of Commerce at the university, is confined to his bed as a result of a bad fall which occurred last Saturday. The ligaments of his right knee were badly wrenched, and he will probably be unable to resume his work at the university for a week or ten days.
