OUR TRADITIONS

We wish that every student in the University might have heard Professor Scott express his sentiments on college traditions at the Convocation Tuesday morning. Those that did hear him will be bigger and better Nebraskans for it, and those that did not, may be sure that they have missed something vital to their life at Nebraska. If you have never stopped before to think of Nebraska traditions, you will do so now. You realize now that traditions are of the essence of your college life; that without traditions, your college life would be barren when compared with that enjoyed by other universities who boast of their cherished traditions.

Nebraska has her traditions the same as does Yale, Harvard, Pennsylvania and Princeton. Ours are every bit as good, and should mean just as much to us as does "Senior Baseball," "Spinning Tops," and "The Yale Fence," to Yale. Corresponding in importance to the Yale traditions just mentioned, are the following Nebraska traditions that all Nebraska students should know about and appreciate: Ivy Day, the Olympics, the Shirt Tail Parade, the Cornhusker Banquet, Competitive Drill, Farmers' Fair, Senior Picnic, Freshman Caps, University Night, Fete Day, and the Girls' Cornhusker Party. There are other traditions of more or less importance that might be added to this list, but these eleven traditions are the ones that are most treasured by Cornhuskers.

The important point brought out by Professor Scott, and the one which we wish to emphasize in all its significance is, that we should carry away from college with us something more than what we have learned from books. Love for our alma mater, and her traditions, should be so instilled in us, that when we grow old and feeble, we will be on common ground with the new generation, when they talk to us about "The Cornhusker Banquet" and "The Shirt Tail Parade." These are the things that will remain with us in after years, and the ones that we will treasure most.

The 1919 Cornhusker devotes an entire section to Nebraska traditions, and every student should familiarize himself with each one. Besides forming an interesting chapter of Nebraska history, they are full of things that every student should know.

THE GIRLS CAN DO IT

They say girls cannot do things. What a mistake. True it is that at times they have lacked the experience denied them by their stronger brothers who have insisted upon running things too deep for mere girls, but why not give them a chance? Through the study of economic conditions it is known that the lack of opportunity and experience more than any other one thing has kept women from the industrial world, and has, incidentally, kept their wages below those of men.

Again, when they are given an opportunity, they prove more efficient than they are expected to be. This may be observed from the latest list of Phi Beta Kappa students which included seven men out of thirty-nine seniors, and even this is an improvement over last year's record, when only four men were chosen from a total of thirty-nine students. Thus the girls now and then try their hand at unexpected lines of work and play, the results of which are not altogether worse than those accomplished by others. We of The Daily Nebraskan wonder just what the effect of our efforts will be.—EDITH HOWE.

UNIVERSITY WEEK

This year's university week promises to be one of the most successful ever given in spite of the short spring vacation which makes it impossible to cover more than the three towns of Superior, Geneva, and Red Cloud.

University week is one of the best methods of advertisement besides athletics, that the university possesses, to interest people over the state in university activities, showing them what is going on in various lines of work.

HAND GRENADES

THE SIXTH SENSE

(This story is short, but really that's the best part of it!)

Many people say that a sense of humor is a valuable asset to one's character, and in verification of this statement, point out many situations which have been saved from dire disaster by a good laugh. Generally speaking, this is true, but there are occasions when a sense of humor is tragic, and a hearty laugh is fatal.

Did some funny thought ever flash through your mind, when you were sitting sedately in church and all was silent? And as you sat there, the thought grew funnier and funnier, and to subdue your mirth was well nigh impossible. Your desperately-stifled chuckles were all too audible, and you were the object of the concentrated attention of the entire congregation. Need I add that you were embarrassed? I need not!

And were you ever dreadfully thirsty, and just as you took unto yourself a nice, big mouthful of water, did not someone make a truly clever remark? Yes! And then people tell you that a sense of humor is a thing to be treasured and cherished!

And were you ever in a class where the professor made some glaring error? And were you not siezed with a desire to laugh? Well, if you were not, you're sort of—er—odd. And it isn't the best policy in the world to laugh at professors' mistakes. No, it is not.

To laugh in the library is a serious offense—in fact it is almost unforgivable. Repetition of this misdemeanor too oft results in your banishment to the cold out-of-doors.

A sense of humor may be all right in its place, but like many other things, out of its place,—well!
