VOTE TODAY

It is to the interest of every member of the junior and freshmen classes to vote in the class elections today. Seniors and sophomores will not have the privilege of expressing their choice for class president—an unfortunate situation, since it kills interest attendant upon a class election, and allays the excitement and keen rivalry which are happy features of student politics.

Students should weigh carefully the qualifications of the candidates on their list before they make a final choice. They are bestowing the highest honor of their group and it should mean more to them than the cajoling of energetic campaign managers who will seek in every way to influence their decisions. There will be satisfaction derived from asserting an independence of will in making a decision for the man they earnestly believe to be the truest representative of their class both inside and outside the University.

But aside from that, there is a real reason why every student should vote. Class elections are a student tradition, a tradition in which every student may have a part. They furnish an illuminating bit of diversion from studies and promote spirit among members of each class. By all means visit the polls today, and vote!

BE PATIENT

There is a tendency among students just entering a University to become disconsolate at the outset under normal conditions. The red-tape of registering, the disappointment in schedules, strange surroundings, and the general unsettled situation tends to lower the morale during matriculation week.

The present period of registration is one of unusual stress to the new students and to many of the old ones who are familiar with the University's surroundings. Despite the splendid organization of the administration, the sudden influx of students has caused a momentary congestion at the Registrar's office and has taxed the rooming accommodations of the city. The situation is abnormal.

Because of the unprecedented enrollment the condition is to be expected. The administration urges the student body to adjust itself to the exceptional situation and exhorts the students to be patient. Students who expect to earn their way are advised to be especially heedful against discouragement.

It is the duty of every student to accommodate himself to the present condition and be patient. Courses will be provided and rooms will be found for all in the next few days. The administration is handling the situation in a way which should meet the approval of the student body. Patience and optimism should guide the students during the present abnormal condition.—The Daily Iowan.

The warning which Dean Engberg issues today on eligibility requirements is deeply significant. It calls to mind the prime purpose for which we are here, namely, to get an education. Other things of equal importance may come but studies are first. Participation in student activities, membership in various organizations and on athletic teams, entrance into class politics, all these hinge upon scholastic standing. They come as the rewards for faithful work in school. And it is rightly so because such requirements prevent unbalanced training which it is the aim of the college course to avoid. The warning of Dean Engberg is timely because it gives all ample opportunity to understand, and in understanding, to fulfill.

STUDENT OPINION

The Daily Nebraskan will be glad to print in its Student Opinion column short articles from students and members of the faculty bearing upon issues of direct concern to the University. It wants to know what other people think. Contributors are asked to sign their names as an evidence of good faith although they be withheld from publication upon request. If you have opinions upon matters of student life and conduct, give expression to them through the columns of the Nebraskan.

DOWN HILL

Colleges this fall east and west are reporting an enormous registration. Here in Chicago, Northwestern and the University of Chicago have both the largest undergraduate attendance in their history. The professional schools are also crowded. But except in the department of science, the graduate schools are not large. In some cases, indeed, they are smaller than usual.

The reason is not far to seek. The graduate students of science are in many cases planning to go into business. Chemistry, botany and geology in particular offer attractive opportunities. But in such fields as economics, modern languages, history and philosophy, the graduate school leads either to teaching or to nothing. And the great mass of our finest young men in this country today are convinced that teaching and nothing else are one and the same, as far as prospects go.

They may be wrong. There are today the same compensations inherent in the teaching profession that there always were. It gives a certain dignity, a certain leisure, a certain opportunity to satisfy the heart that inquires for truth. And these are very real rewards to some.

But the last few years, indeed the last few months have driven home the belief that the ordinary college teacher does not get pay enough to bring up a family decently. They have convinced young men that when a college teacher proposes marriage he is offering the girl a gold brick. He is neither purely selfish nor in love with celibacy.

Therefore he makes up his mind to do anything except teach, and when he asks older teachers for advice they are half-hearted in setting forth the advantages of their own profession.

What this means exactly is that the next generation will not be trained as well as the last. It means that education will go down hill. And a nation in which hill altogether.

The remedy is in the hands of the public. It is applying it slowly, but very slowly. More speed is necessary, or the effect will come too late.—Chicago Herald-Examiner.

SHE TOO?

William J. Burns, the noted detective, said in a Scranton lecture:

"To a well-trained detective every incident is pregnant with significance—yes, every incident is as full of meaning as—well, I am reminded of a story:

"A young man sat in a parlor alone. To him a beautiful girl entered. Thereupon the young man arose took six cigars from his upper waistcoat-pocket, laid them carefully on the piano, and then advanced toward the girl passionately, his arms outstretched.

"But the girl drew back. "You have loved before," she said."—Los Angeles Times.
