WILSON OFFERS FINAL MESSAGE

more altruistic existence, he graphically illustrated the leaps and bounds the doctrine of genuine Christianity had made and pleaded for a greater consecration of each individual toward a better world to live in, abolishing the abolition of slavery and the liquor traffic, and the proposed League of Nations as evidence of the "Supreme Virtue of Democracy."

"We have come to the place in the history of the world where our religion must be reasonable," Mr. Wilson continued, "there are two elements in human existence, the struggle for life and the struggle for the life of others."

Ordinarily the topic "Christian Democracy," is handled in a series of half a dozen lectures. In the thirty schools in which Mr. Wilson has presented this vital subject, he has gotten in touch with student sentiment by a series of cards which the men and women have signed.

Unfortunately for the student-body here, Mr. Wilson did not have the opportunity to present his complete program. The pledge as stated to the students presents the fundamental principles of Christianity:

"1. I will study the great social problems that are in the world for the sake of mankind.

"2. I will seek to follow the spirit of Christ and apply the teachings of Jesus to the problems of the people, in the days which I live.

"3. I here dedicate my life to Christ. I will stand up for the poor and the weak and the oppressed and I will seek to establish the kingdom of God 'within the earth.'"

Mr. Wilson returned to California Thursday night.

Everybody in the neighborhood knew that Henry was under his wife's thumb, and grieved for him. But he was so meek, poor chap! One day, after the usual daily lecture, beginning with his faults and ending with his virtues, Mrs. Peck wound up with: "And what's more, I'd like to meet the man I was afraid of!" "So should I," agreed Henry, thoughtlessly. "I'd buy him a drink."

A sergeant was so much given to using bad language on the parade ground that some of the men complained, and the commandant officer interviewed him, and told him not to let it happen again. The following morning the sergeant was in charge of a very ragged squad and after keeping silent for a considerable time he eventually burst out with: "Bless you, my pretty dears; you know what I mean."
