WANT MORE SUPPORT FOR SCHOOL TEACHERS

Dr. Lida B. Earhart, professor of elementary education in the state university, made a plea the first of the week before the Lincoln Woman's club meeting in the Temple theater, for support of the teaching profession and greater co-operation between the school and the home.

Dr. Earhart stated that largely because of the insufficient salaries paid to teachers there is now a shortage of 100,000 teachers in the country, of which number 38,000 are actual vacancies and 60,000 are in schools taught by girls who have not even finished the high school course. Many teachers also come, she pointed out, from homes where they are the first generation to be educated, or at least to be educated in the English language and traditions.

"I think that 'I should worry' is the most desperate piece of slang ever invented," Dr. Earhart declared, speaking of the inculcation of the proper attitude into the student. "It covers every species of delinquency and is enough to cause moral decay and the breakdown of the feeling of responsibility."

"Religious education, such as it is," the speaker stated, "has gone into the hands of the Sunday school." She decried this condition, stating that religion is such an intimate subject that it should be taught in the home, but that if it must be left to the Sunday school, better provision must be made for instruction given there. "Are children getting what they should from the Sunday school?" she asked. "Are all the Sunday schools in Lincoln turning away teachers?"

Commenting on the cynical remark of a man who saw the many automobiles parked by students at the university, that "It's a fine lot of young folks you have going there to learn to climb up on the necks of other people," she declared that the aim of education should be to teach the individual of the future generation to do as far as they can, but to take their low men with them.

Preceding Dr. Earhart's address Miss Dorothy Doyle sang two songs, which were enthusiastically received by the club, and Miss Harriet Twine, supervisor of girls' educational guidance for the city, presented the plans of the scholarship committee of the Lincoln Commercial club and asked the club's support in this effort to provide a fund for keeping capable students from leaving school because of financial difficulties for which they are not to blame. Miss Twine gave as an instance of the type of student who will be aided by the proposed plan a girl from a family of six, who when she graduated from the eighth grade, was obliged to go to work because her father, who had previously supported the family well, had just contracted cancer and her mother suffering from tuberculosis. This girl worked full time and went to night school, making an excellent record in her studies until she became a victim of influenza, losing much time and being obliged to give up most of her school work on account of weakened vitality.

Mrs. W. A. Sain announced the plans of the dramatic department, which will have charge of the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration of the club and plans to give a pageant reflecting the history of the Lincoln Woman's club. After the program tea was served in Faculty Hall.
