GIRLS' BASKETBALL.

Saturday afternoon in the Armory will be held the annual girls' basketball tournament. This is the chance for Nebraska co-eds to support their teams. In previous years, the meet has been conducted in two sections, an inter-sorority contest and a rainbow meet of teams of specially picked non-sorority girls. It is felt to be a much more democratic and more sportsmanlike plan to have mixed teams, so this year they go designated only by colors. Every Nebraska girl should attend the games, not only for school loyalty to general activities, but because some really exciting games are promised. There are eight teams competing. Go to the meet, pick out your team and then root for that team with all your enthusiasm. Let's make as big a thing of girls' basketball as boys'. It's for you to do, girls.

THE JUNIOR PROM.

Tonight is the greatest social event of the year—the Junior Prom, when enticed by a pretty girl, a good dinner, real jazz music, and many other reasons, the Junior class will dance the light fantastic. At some universities, this dance is the only real formal affair of the social season. Due to the great competition from various sources in the dance world this year, the prestige of the Prom has lost a little of its glamour, but nevertheless it should hold a very dear place in the hearts of all University students. In the old days, the Juniors used to go to the Freshman Prom—now the order is quite reversed. We hope that this will not be the case tonight, for this is the honor occasion for Juniors and we hope that they will respond to make it a true class affair.

NEBRASKA TRACK OPPORTUNITIES.

The Cornhusker track team leaves today for Kansas City to enter in the first meet of this year. Nebraska closed the football and basketball seasons with a splendid record and signs point to a sweep-stake run in track events. Coach Schulte says, "This University is the athletic center of all Huskerland, and in track as well as in football, it should put out a team second to none in the country." With these splendid prospects, we may look forward to a glorious season and let's give the track men the same support and enthusiasm that we have given the other athletic sports.

A LIBRARY SERVICE.

Fountain pens carry only a limited amount of ink. All students are likely to discover at some inopportune moment that their fountain pens have gone dry. Almost all who study in the library use fountain pens while there. None of them carry pens that do not need refilling.

Dozens of times each day students attempt to find an available bottle of ink somewhere in the library. Since the library does not have such a refill station, students are often handicapped in their work and find it advisable to quit studying and go home. Students don't carry bottles of ink around in their pockets.

If one is to judge by the number of students whose fountain pens run dry while working in the library, an available bottle of ink seems to be a necessary part of the reading room equipment. Reference work cannot be done without making notations. Students would appreciate a library service in the form of an ink filling-station.

Coach at Columbia opposes boxing lessons as a graduation requirement because they'd cause cauliflower ears. Odd indeed, when plenty of grads are eager enough to show they have the "earmarks" of an education.—The Daily Cardinal.
