WILL THEY COME HALF-WAY?

Much comment has lately been heard about the campus on the attitude of many of the professors towards students. It is even claimed by some more radical ones that most of the Nebraska professors make no attempt to acknowledge greetings from the students in their classes although they seem to know them very well in class when a recitation is in order. While this is a rather extreme statement of the fact, it is true that many of the accused professors have a habit of putting on a distant and rather forbidding manner outside of the classroom.

In times past the explanation was often given that professors were usually so absent-minded that they did not remember their students at all. But today we feel that our instructors are too up-to-date and modern to be hampered by that fault. Perhaps one reason why certain members of the faculty apparently ignore their students or admirers is because they are thinking of so many other things that personalities fade into the background. In dealing with problems "en masse," the tendency is to forget the smaller interests of individuals.

Nevertheless, this is discouraging to the student body, and especially to Freshmen who, still remember the personal influence of high school teachers, are puzzled by the new atmosphere. They feel distinctly rebuffed and "put in their place," as well as somewhat indignant. This is one of the arguments used by parents who send their sons and daughters to private schools—that there is too much of the "take care of yourself" attitude. Would it not be possible to establish a more personal touch between students and the faculty members, at least between professors and members of their classes?

LOOKING BACKWARD.

With the announcement of the final plans for all Senior pre-graduation social affairs, comes the straight blow again that school is nearing the close. Soon the haughty Seniors will be able to look back and say, "Now when I went to the University," etc. And the Freshmen may say pompously, "Oh, yes, I'm a Sophomore at Nebraska."

The question is—just where are we now? With a University certificate or the record of one year's work in college, have we really made definite strides ahead? "What can you do?" is a big key-word to social and economic problems—and not world problems but the every day's responsibilities of doing our little bit. It isn't "What have you studied, did you make good grades, what certificate do you hold?" Today it's "What are you prepared to do for society?" Has this year been a paying one for you?

The man with an income of $2,000 a year today receives just $870 in value of the standard of 1913.

THE "BOOB" PUBLIC.

Mr. S. T. Meredith, who was recently appointed to the office of Secretary of Agriculture blames what he calls the "boob" Public for their inability and listless attempts to oppose the high prices imposed by the dealers in retail goods. According to him a new decalogue has been wrought into the life fabric of the American Public upon which its actions in regard to prices seem to be based:

"Thou shalt not make unto thee any wisdom precepts.

"Thou shalt not stint, but shall beg and borrow, get into debt, and make no effort to get out.

"Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but thou shalt lay aside nothing for a rainy day.

"Thou shalt covet thy neighbor's wife's sealskin, thy neighbor's classy apartment, his new twin six, and his man servant, and shalt hock thyself and thy earning capacity to emulate him.

"Thou shalt not commit economy.

"Honor the jazz music and the lobster palaces that thy days may be long in penury, pauperism and destitution. Ad. lib."—Purdue Exponent.
