Mr. Jack Frost Makes Debut in Cloud of Heavenly? Perfume!

Jack Frost caused great confusion among the social butterflies of the campus when he announced Tuesday night that he would soon make his debut in the University.
Not only was the fairer sex precipitated into the whirl of society, but the sternest men displayed great excitement. The formalities of social life, long since cast aside under the pressure of scholastic duties, were again brought into play. Conversation turned from the prosaic topics of University routine to that most refined of all topics of polite conversation—the weather.
Men gave up all thought of such a lack of dignity as appearing on the campus in shirt sleeves. Many a co-ed added the formality of hat and gloves to her dress. No artifice in "milday's toilette" was overlooked. More color than usual appeared upon feminine cheeks. No "roll your owns" this morning.

And hark! this can only be whispered. No extravagance of perfume was considered too great. The sentimental co-ed making her way to her nine o'clock felt the usual distaste of being pushed about in a crowd somewhat lessened by a delicate aromatic perfume floating through the air. She thought of all the perfumes her aunt had brought from Paris; still she could not identify this one. "It must be Oriental," she thought. Then she heard someone whisper the word "moth-ball." Ah! at last she understood. It was another one of the elaborate preparations for Jack Frost's debut.
