NEBRASKA BEATS RUTGERS.

It was with great rejoicing that Nebraska enthusiasts received the news of the 28 to 0 victory over Rutgers play by play as it came over the wire. Again the Nebraska football team has established its supremacy over one of the strong eastern teams, and this time its supremacy has been decisive. Again it demonstrates that the western teams and styles of play are equal—and in this case as well as in the Army-Notre Dame game superior to the eastern eleven. The game play by play clearly demonstrated that it was a hard fought battle—where the best team and strongest spirit won.

Now, that Nebraska football ability and spirit has disposed of Rutgers the first large obstacle which stood in the way of the 1920 Cornhuskers on their eastern trip—all eyes should be turned to the game with Penn State Saturday. Although Rutgers was greatly feared, the conflict with Penn State is the most dreaded one of the two. It will take every ounce of Nebraska spirit to keep the Huskers nearly fifteen hundred miles away, fighting a winning battle.

Unite the support behind the team next Saturday in front of the Star building—where the results of the game will be announced. Here the students can get together in many a spirited rally and cheer Nebraska to victory. The solid support of the student body is needed and don't let our "Cornhusker Psychic Wave" be lacking when the Huskers face Penn State.

THE CONCRETE SITUATION.

The election of Senator Harding is evident as we go to press. Now that Senator Harding is to be our next president of the United States, he is going to be confronted with the substantial fact that the whole world except the United States, has entered the league of nations, and ratified the treaty of Paris. He has got through his campaign on his vague talk about a new association of nations. But how is he going to get through the first year of his administration with vague talk? Now he must deal with a concrete situation, and he must have the combined support of the democrats and republicans. Senator Harding is not blind to what is going on—why should anybody else be asked to close his eye to what is going on.

Can anybody read the following report in the London Times and not know that it is a concrete and not a speculative situation we are to deal with? The report reads:

"The ninth conference of the council of the league of nations was concluded this morning with the public session, which made it very clear that, in the words of M. Bourgeois, the president of the council, the league was no longer at the stage of talk but at the stage of action, successive, repeated, and methodically linked together. It has also demonstrated that, contrary to the practice of the peace conference, the small nations can confidently appeal to the league for a hearing and help. The most notable action of the council has been the intervention, successful as far as it goes, in the Polish-Lithuanian conflict.

"There was a dramatic incident after the adoption of the resolution dealing with the Polish-Lithuanian dispute, which demonstrated most effectively just what the league is doing. M. Paderewski, in his speech, turning to the Lithuanian delegate, to whom he referred as 'my colleague and not adversary,' said: 'We must congratulate ourselves on this happy solution. I offer you my hand as a symbol of the lasting friendship which should reign between our two countries.' And with a generous gesture he stretched out his hand."

DO YOUR WORK WELL.

Whatever you do, do it well. Whether the work be great or small complete each and every detail. Finish the job. Half done work is no work at all. The man who goes through with a proposition, who finishes the job, who clinches each and every part of his work with the finishing touch of completeness is the one who succeeds. The fellow who is always starting something which he is unable to finish never gets very far. He may win popularity at first for his novel ideas but when they fail to materialize he loses more than he ever gained. If you start a thing, finish it.

CRIBBING AND UNIVERSITY STANDARDS.

The discovery of some means to curb the evil of cheating in university circles is a question well worth the time and effort being devoted to it. Especially is this true in our own case, for statistics show that during the past school year sixty-three cases were brought before the discipline committee.

It is exceedingly far from a likable task to set these figures down in black and white, but at the same time the apparent seriousness of the situation demands that it be brought forcibly home. Students should not feel that the list is confined only to Freshmen and Sophomores. Among the total are listed cases of students who are classed as leaders in school life.

Given the problem, the question logically follows as to how it can best be solved. In a cosmopolitan university like Wisconsin, an honor system would work only with difficulty. It has been and is now being used in the medical school with some degree of effectiveness. There, however, the social responsibility of a smaller school exists; while in the university at large, with its 7,000 students divided into different colleges, a feeling of solidarity, much as it is needed, does not exist.

We are told that an honor system works exceedingly well at the University of Virginia. Slight investigation makes this reason very apparent. The students there are drawn from the old cavalier families who must give the greatest heed to the reputations they establish at college. A student found cribbing is ostracized by his fellow students and must leave.

With this in mind it might not be amiss to consider the various phases of the whole question. Students may roughly be divided into three classes; namely, 1, the habitual cheaters; 2, the occasional cheaters, or those who crib on the spur of the minute when their pride will not permit of facing failure; 3, the honest. The largest number of cheaters undoubtedly falls into class two. Consequently any campaign of reformation should seek to reach them first, in such a manner that elimination of the habitual cheater will follow in short order. Our case is similar to that of the University of Virginia in the one respect of students being the medium for effecting the cure. We must think not so much of the degree of punishment as we must of the certainty of it. Suppose that it would be possible to pick some member of the faculty in whom all of the students could place their confidence.

Then it would be possible to make the following appeal to the students. If any of them see a case of cheating let it be reported, not as a charge but rather as a check for the future. In that way the man who is an habitual cheater will be reported from practically all of his classes before he is so listed and before charges are brought.

Such a practice does in a certain sense savor of "tattling" and for that reason might not work. By far the best plan advanced is the one which gets the party while he is still in class two. It is the one plan which points the way to a logical solution. If the entire student personnel is going to be converted to the principles of honesty why not evolve a system that will make the cheater feel he will be an outcast from the good graces of campus life?

When, as was the case in one instance last year, almost an entire class takes advantage of a near sighted instructor to do wholesale cribbing, the few honest students in the class could not have been accused of the odious art of "tattling" if they had gone to the authorities, asked for cancellation of the examination and the holding of another one under stricter supervision. If the occasional cheater is informed that he can't get by with it; that it isn't fair with the rest of the class; and finally that it isn't square with the cheater himself, the practice will soon become a matter of history.

In the past students have voted down the installation of an honor system at Wisconsin. The evil of cheating still persists and will continue to do so until there will come to be a voluntary desire on the part of every student to shun the practice to the point of letting ever other student know his views.

The Cardinal will welcome a frank, unbiased, and constructive discussion of this entire question in its communication column. Therein can usually be found the way to solve those questions uppermost in the minds of students.—The Cardinal.

Baby pink or blue stationery isn't generally perpetrated among the F. F. V.'s but I've discovered a tint that wouldn't cause even the suspicion of an elevated eyebrow among the most elite. It is a very pale gray—Hurds suede finish, with large square envelopes, and paneled. Can't you just see your sorority crest on it in silver? Priced at $2.50 a box. —Street Floor.

Introducing Gift Granny to polite society is one of my chief occupations these days. She's the dear old lady who lives on our balcony for the express purpose of finding out what all your friends want for Christmas. She does it on the q. t. too! Come up and meet her secretary, won't you? She graduated from Nebraska last year, so she speaks your language. —Balcony.

Who's thinking about a nice comfy coat that is draft-proof, and yet will draw a bit of favorable attention? I can't get too enthusiastic about the wonderful assortment of coats I saw on the second floor this morning. Some of them had great big fur collars and cuffs, others just of the material. They're made of these soft silky fabrics everyone likes and the linings are beauties! I was agreeably surprised too at the moderate pricings. —Second Floor.

Those of you who can't hear Mary Garden tonight can at least console yourselves with a new bottle of her perfume, a box of face powder, rouge, or others of those little necessities which one must have these days in order to put one's best face forward. If you have time, notice the window display—it's very attractive. The face powder is $1.00, the rouge 50c, and the toilet water is $3.50. —Street Floor.

A girl and her $1.50 are soon parted when certain vanity cases come on the scene. They're positively the cutest little tricks you ever saw—Tiny rose colored boxes containing a powder and a rouge compact and a tiny eyebrow pencil and an equally diminutive lip stick. They're Hudnats preparations, too! —Street Floor.
