

Grocer Must Also Be Something Of A Chef, Says Allen To Class

That a grocer must be something of a chef was the startling statement made by Fred Allen of the O. J. King company in his talk given before the class in retail salesmanship Tuesday morning. This is the second of a series of talks on the necessity of the salesman knowing the goods he sells.

Mr. Allen explained that in order to work up a demand for new or fancy groceries the salesman must educate the housewife in their use. Very often the woman who entertains welcomes suggestions from her grocer as to the new and unusual in refreshments. Not only must the salesman be able to suggest a new commodity but he must be able to tell how it is prepared for the table. He must understand what kinds of dressings will blend most harmoniously with certain kinds of food. In short he must be connoisseur of food.

Mr. Allen discussed in detail several kinds of fancy groceries, such as alligator pears, caviere and Swiss cheese, telling where they are produced and touching on their use.

COBB SPEAKS TO LARGE AUDIENCE

most necessary, a second fried doughnut until the grease popping on her hands blistered them into great red monstrosities and still another fainted at her work and fell face-downward on the glowing coals.
Mr. Cobb depicted humor as the saving grace of the American people and illustrated this with humorous stories scattered throughout his whole speech. He told the story of the biggest laugh the German army had during the war. He and four other war correspondents were wandering through Belgium when they came upon the fourth son of the kaiser and his staff. Mr. Cobb wore a straw hat without any crown, a pair of gray bedroom slippers and a butcher's canvas smock covered with grease thick enough to furnish a blue blaze forty-eight hours if it were set afire. The others looked worse. As Mr. Cobb approached a high officer he raised his hat and the German army let out its greatest laugh of the war.

Reception After Lecture.
After the lecture, Mr. Cobb was given an informal reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carlisle L. Jones, Eighteenth and D streets. Among those in attendance were Governor and Mrs. Samuel McKelvie, Prof. and Mrs. M. M. Fogg, William Hiller, Prof. H. Alice Howell, Miss Fitzgerald, Mr. and Mrs. Grier, Howard Murfin, Kenneth Saunders, Story Harding, Oswald Black, Roy Gustafson, George Maguire and Amos Ginn.

stated, "that it was without the knowledge or approval, so far as can be learned, of any department of the University, or of its higher authorities, that Miss Reeves secured the privilege of lecturing in a University hall during the last few days. The room was let, I understand, on a purely commercial basis, as a consequence of a misunderstanding arising in the office of the superintendent of grounds and buildings of the University," he stated.

In so far as Miss Reeves has obtained a valid rent receipt for the use of the room, it is understood that she will not be hindered in the use of it for the purposes and upon the terms agreed to between herself and the party having the authority to rent the room.
