

ESTABLISHMENT OF A UNIVERSITY PRESS AND A SCHOOL OF JOURNALISM HOPED FOR

work. With the printing of the Daily Nebraskan on the campus, another change comes to the mind of newspaper men out in the state who are deeply interested in the teaching of newspaper work.

This change is the extension of the present courses in journalism work, to a full School of Journalism. In that event, several important changes would be likely. The first one which naturally comes to the mind of he who has thought over the question deeply would be a change in the method of handling the Daily Nebraskan. The publication would be put under the School of Journalism, and used as a laboratory for journalism students. Editors would not be appointed by the Student Publication Board, as is now the rule. The editors would be taken from the advanced courses in journalism, from the news editing and newspaper administration classes. They would not hold their positions except for a short length of time, the jobs being successfully held by others. They would work under the same freedom of policy as they now work. The only exception would be that their technical newspaper work would be a part of their course of study, they would receive credit, and the work would be done under the supervision of a competent newspaper man.

Reporters, on the Daily Nebraskan, under this system would naturally be drawn from the news-writing classes. The daily assignments would be a part of their regular class work, and class room credit would be given for the work, with due regard for the excellence or non-excellence of the individual specimens of writing.

An objection might be raised that this work would prevent those from doing Daily Nebraskan work who are not desirous of entering newspaper work as a life work. This is not so. Students would register for such work as they now register for track, football and other branches of athletics and they would receive credit in the same way.

The advantage of the system would be that newspaper workers would at all times be upon the staff of the Daily Nebraskan, and that the workers upon the mechanical and the editorial ends would receive university credit in the same manner that those who participate in athletics receive credit.

This outline of the hopes of the newspaper man of Nebraska is meager, it is true, but it does present in somewhat tangible form, just what the newspaper fraternity of the state is hoping for, and what it is going to insist upon. It feels that Nebraska ought to have just as good a School of Journalism as has Missouri, for instance, or Kansas, where the university press is housed in its own building.

Newspaper men of Nebraska, feel further, that the courses in journalism now conducted under the supervision of M. M. Fogg are providing just the right sort of nucleus for the School of Journalism which they want to see established.

This dream of the University Press, of the establishment of a School of Journalism,—this is a dream which is not far off, and its fulfillment will be an occasion of gladness for every newspaper worker in the state, and for everyone who has the best interests of the University of Nebraska.

M. G. WYER TO DELIVER LECTURE TO FRESHMEN

The Freshman Lecture this week will be one of particular interest to new students. Malcom G. Wyer, librarian, will talk on "The University Library." The library is of vital importance to every student, but if he cannot avail himself of its facilities, it does him no good.

Formerly when new students were fewer than they are this year, Mr. Wyer conducted small groups through the library, explaining where certain books were to be found, how to rise them, and gave them all information a freshman needs. However, as enrollment grew, this plan had to be discarded, and a general lecture substituted. Last year, and several years before, small hand-books were distributed containing specific information on how to use the library, but owing to the great demand last year, and to the printer's delay in publishing new ones, only a few of these are left. Mr. Wyer therefore will explain personally the card index system, reference books, magazines, and give a talk on the library as a help to the student. Mr. Wyer is very well known in library work, having published several bibliographies and having held positions in the University of Minnesota, the University of Iowa, and Colorado College, before he came to Nebraska. He has been occupied here since the fall of 1913.

DO YOU NEED ADDITIONAL MONEY FOR COLLEGE EXPENSES?

We have openings for several students to represent us in Lincoln. The work is dignified and remunerative, yet will not conflict with class work.

In addition to enabling students to make money to help defray college expenses, this is an opportunity to get experience that will be valuable in helping the successful applicants decide their life work.

Write us fully, in confidence, giving age, experience, in detail course of study, and, if possible, enclose a post card photo. If your application interests us a personal interview will be arranged for.
