OUTSIDE ADVANTAGES.

The university students are exceedingly fortunate in having a number of educational advantages aside from those offered by the university itself. The lecture and concert bookings of the city of Lincoln show for the coming winter, the names of artists who are known over the entire country.

We are, sometimes inclined to be selfish, to become narrowed in our own little circle and even in our views of the university. There is nothing more broadening or more helpful than to avail ourselves of these opportunities to hear the really worth-while speakers, players and musicians who bring to us that which we are unable to go in search of. It is to be hoped that the students will profit by these outside benefits.

AWGWAN MATERIAL.

Awgwan material has been arriving very slowly for the next issue of the college comic. The editor of the publication has been calling for more material each day since the October issue of the publication went to press. The material has slipped in at a very slow rate and in small amounts. To date, the editor states, there are not over four members of the staff of last month who will merit a place this month on the editorial staff.

The comedians of the school who feel that they can sit down and write off a complete issue of the college comic in one evening will find that humorous vein somewhat flat when the time comes for the final submission of copy to be made. An effort was made last month, according to the editor, to submit a great deal of old stuff, some rewritten and some boldly copied.

Much of the copied material immediately found the editor's first aid, the waste basket. Some crept thru, not because it was slipped past but because the material was needed and in a hurry. The material was not credited to other papers since it was impossible to tell just what paper each joke came from.

More care will be taken this month. Indeed, it is stated, care will be taken in the final selection of the staff in order to include those who put forth strenuous efforts to benefit the paper rather than to aggrandize themselves by 'getting by' with copied material. Some fifty comic magazines go thru the editor's hands each month and very little copied material can go thru without the staff's knowledge of it. Right now is the time to get in material for the next issue. Saturday is the last day. Get busy.

CONTEMPORARY OPINION

Cornell Daily Sun. DIVIDING ONE'S TIME.

There are three occupations that in general command the time and energy of the undergraduate—studies, extra-curriculum activities, and loafing. The dividing line between the second category and the third may be drawn at the point where his energy ceased to be directed for the good of the university or of some university organization.

The normal student can carry on two of these three occupations with a fair degree of success, but finds when he tries all three that something must suffer. A few men can do only one, while a few can carry on all three. But most are faced with the problem of eliminating one of them, and concentrating on the other two.

The first occupation cannot be done away with completely. Even the most obstinate lounge-lizard finds that his classes demand a certain amount of his attention. Nor can the honor-seeker devote quite all his time to his activities. They both must compromise with the academic.

If studying is to be one of the student's occupations, his only choice is as to the other. He may choose on the basis of what will give him the most pleasure, or what will profit him most. If he chooses the latter he will devote his spare time to light literature, the movies, and poker. If the former, he will find himself on some squad or some competition.

The student's first obligation, obviously, is to his studies. Once he finds how much of his time he wants to devote to that, he can loaf or he can compete in proportion to the time he has left.

"Hello party. Hold your line a min ute," as she rolls her own.
"Start the conversation."

"My line is busy." Stoops again.
"Ring 'em again," suggests our hero.

"Long distance calling." This when another male passes by in car and hails her

"I am waiting."
"Did you get your party?"
"No."

"Hello, here's your party," coos our heroine as she slips her arm in his, after having decided not to go riding.
