THOUSANDS PARADE AS HUSKERS LEAVE
masse at the Burlington.
There they stopped for just one second. Then forward march again, they passed through the gates and stood beside the train awaiting the team. Cheering and singing all the time, the boosters watched the Husker gridsters board the steam wagon and settle for the long ride.
Then followed a squirming effort on the part of all the students to get next to the train and bid goodbye and good luck to their team. More cheering and the following speech by Captain Swanson:
Captain Swanson Speaks.
"Students, this is the greatest send-off a Cornhusker team ever got. If the team plays as I am sure it will, everything will come out all right." Singing of more songs, shaking of more hands and bidding of more good lucks and the hopes of Nebraska started to move slowly toward Omaha, Chicago and South Bend. And not until the last Cornhusker football player has disappeared did the boosters start to leave the middle of the tracks where they had swarmed to watch the very last wave of the hand. Then another, but much diminished parade went slowly and reluctantly toward the university campus for another day of anxiety preceding the day of days. Saturday will find this same mass of students on the M street side of The Lincoln Star building listening to each and every movement of "their team."

PLAYERS' PROGRAM DRAWS BIG CROWD
furnishes more than her share of a delightful love scene.
Hart Jenks, a new-comer in the ranks of the players, by his good work as Bland, deserves the selection.
Hearty rounds of applause greeted the players at several exciting turns in the plot. Many of the minor parts of the members of the cast, including "Props" Successful.

When the curtain rings up and the snow falls and the wind howls of course every one knows that it isn't real snow that is falling and the wind isn't really blowing, and that "props" is grinding the wind machine with one hand and sifting snow with the other, but still the audience instinctively shivers. Gerald Leuch is the man responsible for the chills.
The players are unusually fortunate in securing such a fine comedy for their opening bill. It was said last spring, on the campus, "Let us have more plays like the 'Tailor-made Man.'" Here is one that satisfies that want.
The players are a student organization and dependent upon student support. They have selected their season's plays most carefully. Their ambition is to fill the place made by the absence of a stock company in Lincoln and to keep alive the best plays for those people who thoroughly appreciate the legitimate drama. From the abundant praise of dramatic circles of Lincoln people, they are well along the road to the realization of that ambition.
There are two more performances of "Seven Keys to Baldpate," Friday and Saturday. The seat sale indicates full houses for both nights. Seats may be secured at Ross P. Curstee Music Co.
