

FINE ARTS COLLEGE HAS NOVEL CLASSES

Three New Subjects Being Taught To Students This Year.

Three novel classes have been installed in the college of fine arts. They are: a class in interior decorating, a class in anatomy and a class in pictorial composition.

The interior decorating class is working in a garden breakfast room in a suburban home. The breakfast room faces a sunken garden; and the attempt is to place the many windows so that the casings serve as frames for natural mirrors to the garden scene. Mature motives are used for the furniture and walls of this breakfast room. The plan of this class is to design and create the rooms of a modern suburban home, but architectural constructions and beautifully constructed designs must be understood.

The class in anatomy has been studying the human figure so as to get a true idea of the constructed designs which the joining of the bones and the crossing and intercrossing of the muscles make. Anatomy is being studied from the artist's point of view.

Pictorial composition is the third of these novel classes. Its purpose is to compose a picture visually and not to copy, although suggestions from nature can be taken and colors can be taken and treated in an abstract way in order to create a unit.

Using the definition, that a painting as a work of art is something different from a literal copy of nature, the class is using shapes and sizes just as a musician uses ideas and sounds in creating his compositions.

A Thought for today

"Manners are the happy ways of doing things, each one a stroke of genius or of love—now repeated and hardened into usage."—Emerson.

"Only the Gods can give you a manner, but you can give yourself good manners, and of all the self-gifts in the power of your bestowing, none other will carry you through life on such well-oiled wheels; none other will come so near making up for any deficiencies with which unkind nature may have handicapped you.

The famous favorites of history have never been merely beautiful women; some have been anything but beautiful. Always it has been the charm of the manner and the manners that held.

"Fine manners are melody, grace."

ousness is song, and some must forever be mute, singing only in their hearts.

"Our ways of doing all the everyday things, from the moment we begin a day till its close, our entrances and exits, our manner of sitting, rising, speaking, walking, talking, meeting friends, going here and there about the earth, form an exterior which is all most people ever get of us. There may be pure gold deep down inside, but we can't ask the busy world to stop and mine us to find it out. The evidences of its being there had better come to the surface in the "happy ways" if we want to be appreciated, to get the most out of living, and to give the most. We owe it to ourselves—and those with whom we travel—to be a pleasure person. Some of the most worthy people in the world go unloved and unappreciated to their graves because of their bad manners."
