INDIAN PIPES AND ARROW HEADS MOUNTED IN MUSEUM

Several Indian pipes which were donated to the state museum by the Omaha public library have been placed in display cases. These pipes were carved out of catinite, commonly called pipestone which is very common in Minnesota. Articles of this kind were at one time obtained very easily from the Indian tribes which inhabited Minnesota and North Dakota.

The eyes of the whole world are turned to Japan at the present time, trying to ferret out if possible, her attitude towards the interests of the world's peace at the limitation of armament conference. No one knows just what her attitude will be. Many influences have been at work in Japan moulding public ideals and towards a world brotherhood. Without doubt the most prominent influences have been the church and the Y. W. C. A. Hundreds of Japanese girls are reached by the organized work of the secretaries. The classes are carried on with great enthusiasm and they aid in clarifying and strengthening their Christian faith so that as they look over to America, they will think of American girls as belonging to a

CONSERVATION SURVEY FILMS OKLAHOMA GAME

The Conservation survey division of the university, at the request of Oklahoma, took about 400 feet of films on the Oklahoma-Nebraska game. The films have been printed and show the plays but it is difficult to distinguish the two teams on account of the mud. Oklahoma has said nothing more about the films.

The motion picture division of Kansas has asked the conservation division of the University of Nebraska to send a man to Kansas to take motion pictures of the football game a week from Saturday. It is the Kansas homecoming day game.

STUDENT OPINION.

To the Editor of The Daily Nebraskan: Why shouldn't Nebraska have a Thanksgiving holiday worthy of the name?

The Thanksgiving holidays have always meant a great deal to most university students and limiting, this year the time to one day only will cause many a headache, both on the campus and in towns throughout the state.

Probably to the upper classmen, it seems only the breaking of a custom, and if this were so we would be silent, but it means far more to many, specially to the new student, who, perhaps will, for the first time, have to spend Thanksgiving away from home. Many a new student has already felt, and is feeling the pangs of homesickness and bearing up under it, buoyed up by the inferred promise of a holiday, watchfully waiting for the Thanksgiving time in order that he might see his folks again, and now comes an announcement that the holiday will be for one day only. This shatters the hopes he has built up for a real Thanksgiving day, and who can say that the benefits and knowledge gained by this one day of classes will compensate for the shattered hopes and heartaches which will be in many breasts that day.

The assertion is made that the time is so short before Christmas vacation that a holiday at this time is not needed, but by examination of the calendar you will notice that it is practically four weeks, and these four weeks mean much more to a new student, fresh from home, which he has probably never left before, for even so long a time as four weeks, than four years would mean to a person who has spent a greater portion of his life away from his relatives and dearest friends.

We contend that by combining Friday and Saturday following Thanksgiving day into one holiday the benefits gained will mean much more, both in increased zeal during the following month, and also in an esprit de corps which means so much in any organization and that is what our university is, an organization of learning, than any amount of learning which may be soaked up in one or two days.

Yours for a real holiday,
G. S. SALTER.
