BACK FROM SOUTH

extension. Its effect on legislation has probably been the greatest of any association in the country.

Chancellor Avery remarked that he used his position as president of this association last year to eliminate himself from the drudgery of committee work, but a number of important things came up including the relations with the war department in military drill so that he felt compelled to put his shoulders to the wheel again on a number of propositions. It is always easier to take on than to avoid work of this sort after one has become a veteran in any association. The other Nebraska men also received important committee assignments.

On his way home Chancellor Avery stopped at Memphis, Tenn., to interview a person under consideration for an important position in the university.

The Nebraska people were fortunate that this year so many important dates could be made on one trip, thus saving time and expense. The delegates at all the meetings attended strictly to business with less junketing, dining and after dinner speaking than was usual. Two hours were given up one afternoon as the guests of the harbor board on a patrol boat excursion up and down the shipping district where were at anchor boats of nearly all commercial nations. Aside from this small junket practically all the delegates attended strictly to the meetings of the several conventions.

The south feels fairly prosperous now owing to the increase in the price of cotton. A little time ago conditions seemed to be even more desperate than in the corn belt with corn at 15 cents a bushel. Just now probably the corn belt is suffering relatively the worst depression of any part of the country, or rather would be if it had not been for the accumulation of its resources. We have never lived half as close to bankruptcy as the people have in the south.

Merchandise in display in cities like Memphis and New Orleans averages a somewhat cheaper grade and lower cost than in northern cities. I presume that there is no marked difference in values when quality is considered. Southern people claim that it took their states twenty years to accumulate the wealth dissipated by the civil war. Inasmuch as they have long known poverty that the northern states have not known, they are perhaps even stronger than the people of the northern states for disarmament. They base this on economic grounds. There is almost no sentimental pacifism in the south.

lost his main ship the 'Karlut,' he resumed his exploration by sledge over the Arctic ocean and, when deserted by his supporting sledge 75 miles off shore, with two men and six dogs he journeyed over the running ice pack for sixteen days, living largely by his rifle on polar game. The following year north of Prince Patrick island he discovered and explored a new body of land whose coasts were quite rugged and mountainous.

He has made archaeological researches in Iceland, wintered one year with the Eskimo, and returned alone across country by the way of the Porcupine and Yukon rivers.

"The Eskimo," says Mr. Steffanson, "although physically no better fitted for withstanding cold than we are, knows so much better than the rest of us how to deal with cold that it gives the uninitiated the impression of greater hardihood, but a white man who keeps his eyes open soon acquires all the winter lore that is of great value and becomes quite the equal of the Eskimo in taking care of himself." These words are the keynote of Vilhjalmur Steffanson's success in polar expeditions.

Mr. Steffanson left for the arctic region in 1913 and returned after the close of the world war. He was greatly surprised to learn that there had been a war.

It is not very often that Lincoln has a chance to hear a man like Vilhjalmur Steffanson speak, who is without doubt one of the three greatest explorers at this time.
