Handicaps. The average person who has never known what a physical handicap is, cannot appreciate the blessing that has been bestowed upon him.

Some people have become famous in spite of, and partly by reason of, the heavy cross that they have to bear in the form of some great physical encumbrance.

The people that do not realize what these handicaps mean are apt to be inconsiderate toward them, unintentionally to be sure, but it hurts just the same.

The handicapped do not ask for sympathy, that is the last thing that they want, but a little consideration is appreciated. Be careful what you say, and refrain from rubbing it in.

OUR IDEAL AUTUMN. This editorial has had a race with the weather. It had to be written. It really should have been written earlier.

With few exceptions the last month has been remarkable for its continued good weather, clear, bright, calm days and brisk and to some romantic nights.

Most of us have taken advantage of the opportunities afforded by the splendid weather. Let us see that in the "melancholy days" that will come, we keep up with the same Nebraska spirit which characterizes the majority of the students of the University of using every power we have.

BETTER ENGLISH. There are six brands of English, according to a well known Lincoln newspaperman. They are good, better, best, bad, worse and abominable.

At the University of Iowa last week was held a "Better Speech" campaign. Would this not be of value as a part of the University of Nebraska yearly program?

During this week, posters might be placed in all buildings and all instructors could be constantly on the lookout to correct all errors in speech. While the active campaign would last but a week, the spirit of better English created during the campaign would carry on throughout the year, and the speech of all students would be materially improved.

This does not mean that University of Nebraska students use bad English but they do not choose their words as carefully as is possible. Of course, students would have to cooperate with the faculty to produce the best results: Every student would correct his fellows whenever he noticed a mistake in his speech.

A Thought For Today. CLARION CALL.

It might be practical for boot-leggers to wear an official badge so they won't run onto each other. Who knows, some day it may be an established profession, and boot-leggery will be left by father to son.

Speaking of official badges for the prize-runners, that isn't so new. Chicago policeman are well organized with badges, etc, and they strive to please the customer.

UNI GRADUATE HEAD OF VETERANS' BUREAU

L. A. Crandall, graduate of the University of Nebraska, has been placed in charge of the headquarters of the government veterans bureau for eastern Nebraska and western Iowa, established in Omaha after consolidation of the Lincoln and Omaha offices was made. Crandall was formerly in charge of the Lincoln office.

The work of managing the veterans bureau requires the handling of many men taking vocational training. Omaha has the greatest number of the trainees, says Crandall, but Lincoln in the University of Nebraska, has the better training facilities.

JOURNALISTIC TRAINING ON PROFESSIONAL BASIS

Need of Strong Natural Organization of Newspaper Writes and Editors.

"With the development of schools of journalism, training for newspaper work is passing out of the apprenticeship method of the trades into the college method of the other professions like law, medicine, and engineering," said Professor Wallard G. Bleyer, director of journalism at the University of Wisconsin and president of the American association of Teachers' of Journalism, in addressing the students of the Medill School of Journalism at Chicago.

"Just as with the development of professional training for law and medicine, the state has set up higher and higher standards for the practice of these professions, so it is not unlikely that, because of the importance of newspapers in shaping public opinion, definite requirements will be established for admission to the profession of journalism," he continued.

"The success of our democratic form of government depends on sound public opinion, which is the composite of individual private opinions largely if not entirely on the basis of the news that they read in the newspapers.

"It is even more important to the state that the newspaper men and women who gather, write and edit the news be well informed and well trained for their work, than that lawyers and doctors be qualified to practice their professions.

"The profession of journalism suffers today from the lack of a strong national organization of newspaper writers and editors, comparable to the American Bar association and the American Medical association.
