

Co-ed Wears Rings on Her Fingers and Bells on Her Toes

With rings on her fingers—and for all that is known on her ears too—a University of Nebraska co-ed has followed the old saying to the letter and put bells on her toes.

Goloshes, those flapping shoes which protect fair ladies' feet from the snow, have long since been forgotten as strange apparel. Since this form of dress could no longer be looked on as out of the ordinary, some new form of attraction had to be found. So last Friday, there appeared on the university campus a fair co-ed with bells tied to the goloshes.

Not exactly on the toes did she wear the bells but as close to them as was possible. The jingling instruments were tied to the over-shoes with little ribbons and every time the foot moved a tingling sound issued forth.

Just how popular this newest of fads will prove remains to be seen but undoubtedly the next snow fall—the thawing has made the wearing of Goloshes rather conspicuous—will bring with it an array of fair damsels jingling down the street with rings on their fingers and bells on their toes.

was very interesting. An attractive exhibit of tied and dyed work applied to curtains, backs, cushions and scarfs was shown.

A large display of children's clothes of batistes, nainsook, gingham and satens was shown in the clothing laboratory. In the same laboratory was a large exhibit of lingerie of pongee, cotton, and silk. The textile laboratory had many interesting and unusual exhibits, such as weaving and spinning processes by hand. A detailed glove manufacturing exhibit in this laboratory was well worth studying. One table contained stain removing reagents which are usable for most housewives. Another table was filled with lovely colored silks in every shade and tint produced by using one or more of the three primary colors, red, blue and yellow. A large display of hand made laces was shown.

Style Show.

A style show was held in the cafeteria which was attractively decorated in large masses of evergreen boughs and bouquets of flowers. Miss Morton, head of the clothing department explained briefly the aims of the department. The college girls are taught the needs of the family, considering each individual member, from the infant to the mother. The first group of students in the style show wore attractive housedresses and aprons made in the first year clothing classes. Since this is the dress a housewife wears more than half of her time, the same amount of care is design and color suited to her personality should be given as to any of her afternoon and evening dresses. Twelve children wore some of the pretty children's clothes made also in the first year clothing classes. Each little garment showed that care had been taken in the design and the material suited to the child. Many new short cuts in sewing were shown here such as rompers made in two hours.

A group of students wore hats made in the millinery classes. These hats which averaged in price from two to five dollars could not be purchased for several times this price if bought in a shop.

Senior girls in the school of agriculture wore the school, afternoon and evening dresses they had made in their clothing classes. These girls designed and made their dresses to meet their needs and showed good taste in clothes for the high school girl.

The last feature of the style show was the dresses of the advanced clothing classes. These dresses showed the aim of this course, not to follow the latest fashions but to study the individual and make each dress a study of the girl's own personality bringing out the best in her complexion, eyes, hair and figure. These dresses were made with a careful study of art principles, materials and types.

In the reception rooms on the second floor the Omicron Nu girls served punch and wafers to the guests.

Filipino Association.

A Filipino alumni club with headquarters in the United States branches in the islands is now being formed. Manuel Carreon, '20, who took post-graduate work at Columbia and is doing advance work in education at the University of Minnesota, is the moving spirit in the formation of the organization. It is thought that such a club will form a permanent tie between the Filipino students and the university.

In order to receive a charter for an alumni association in Nebraska application must be received from country groups made up of ten graduates or former students who are in active standing in the organization.
