BACK AGAIN

After a week of recess the Daily Nebraskan appears again on the Cornhusker campus. The new editorial staff has assumed charge and everything is set to start the semester with a boom.

The co-operation of the student body and the faculty is just as necessary to a successful Daily Nebraskan as it is to any other activity or movement on the campus. A big campaign for subscriptions is on this week. Co-eds are everywhere on the campus with receipt books trying to sell you the Nebraskan.

We need your support. The Nebraskan is just as much yours as anybody's. It is edited and managed by fellow students who don't know any more or aren't any better looking than you are. Subscribe for it.

LUEHRING LEAVES.

Luehring is going. His resignation as chairman of the department of athletics and physical education came last week as a complete surprise to the Husker student body. Only very close personal friends of Mr. Luehring had any inkling of his intentions. Nebraska loses and Minnesota profits. Luehring was too big a man for Nebraska with her present equipment and facilities. When he came here from the east we made him all kinds of promises—a new stadium, a new gymnasium, and other things that have failed to materialize. The school cannot be blamed, however, but neither can Mr. Luehring. Luehring has been a God-send to Nebraska during the two years he has been here. He has put the Cornhusker institution on the map in the athletic world. He has made the most of what facilities he had to work with and more students have participated in athletics than ever before. We rejoice over the success of the time he has seen here and regret that he is going to leave.

Mr. Luehring cannot be blamed for this action in the matter. The university failed to keep faith with him and it is his privilege to do as he thinks best. We know Mr. Luehring too well to cherish the idea that it was the increase in salary that persuaded him to accept the Gopher offer. To criticize Mr. Luehring's decision would merely indicate that we have lost faith in his judgment. We are sorry he is going but it is up to him.

THE ARMS CONFERENCE.

How close are University of Nebraska students following the limitation of arms conference that is now in session in Washington, D. C.? This meeting is one of the most important and far-reaching events of the present age. The results and decisions reached there will have a direct bearing on every student. The arms conference should be a subject of keen interest to all of us.

With this belief in mind, the Daily Nebraskan has arranged to carry in the very near future, a series of articles written by experts which deal with the various problems as they are being taken up. Five articles on the far east, written by such figures as V. K. Wellington Koo, B. Slavsky, Baron Kijuro Shidehara, Dr. G. E. Uyebara, and Eulogio B. Rodriguez, are among the first that will be printed.

These articles are being released by the National Student committee for the limitation of armaments to meet the growing demand for a balanced presentation of the issues arising out of the negotiations now in progress in Washington. Public interest in the far east will probably wax even keener when the treaties go to the senate. The issue will then be squarely up to the American people for decision.

Watch for these articles and read them.

Contemporary Opinion

CURIOSITY SHOP MIND.

Occasionally one meets a man with a mind like an overstocked curiosity shop, a mind cluttered with countless shabby, dusty facts, a dingy mind unit by the sunlight of rich human sympathies and common sense that life contracts yield. Such a man perhaps can tell you Alabama's cotton production for 1897, or maybe the middle name of Buchanan's minister to Denmark, although if he is that good he is doubtless in vaudeville. More likely his feats are less spectacular, and he is a laundry driver or a clerk.

He will never succeed, except possibly at vaudeville, because he lacks intelligence to distinguish between facts, and between facts and principles.

Books are fitter custodians of most facts than the mind. Many touchstone facts must be learned, truly, but time and retentive power conspire to limit the number of facts the average person can make his own. Most facts should be left to rest on library shelves, there subject to resort, not jugged about.

Principles, the trees of which facts are leaves, are far fewer, and worthier of seeking and retaining. One principle leads to a million facts, a million facts to a single principle. In so far as a student masters and remembers principles, and builds his own thought on them, he is a thinker, not a human encyclopedia. His learning is adaptable, not mechanical.—University of Washington Daily

Student Opinion.

Everyone agrees, I believe, in the necessity of economy. We are all economizing now, and have been for some time. But just as is the case with every good movement it is some times carried too far.

In the basement of the gym, in an old arm chair behind a rubbing table, sits a man beloved by all Cornhuskers past and present. He is "Nebraska's Grand Old Man" who has faithfully treated the athletes in this university for the past thirty odd years, or ever since there were any to treat. He has always given his best for the school and is still on the job. Never since I can remember, during the past three or four years, has a football team, playing away from home, gone into the game with a wire from "Jimmie" to fight hard for the old Scarlet and Cream. At home he is, weather permitting, on the side lines at every game. He is at every basketball game the weather will let him attend, ready to rub a "charlie" or smooth out any bruises that the team may get. He has worked his way into the heart of every Cornhusker who has known him to such a place that to drop into the gym and find him not there is like going into a morgue.

He has not been there the last day or so and according to reports will not be back again for several days.

He is laid up with a bad cold contracted from lack of heat in the gym. For two days prior to his getting sick he was chilled and gradually caught a cold which became worse. The janitor asked for more heat but it did not come.

He is getting little enough pay as it is, having had his meager salary cut January 1, and the least the university can do is to afford him a comfortable place in which to spend the remaining days of his life, which we all hope will be many.

The Exhaust.

"That sure gets me down," quacked the duckling as she shook another drop of water from her back.

One of the star reporters asked who the following were when asked to cover all assignments relating to Polly Cy, convocation, or Polly Eck.

"Rings on her flazers (and ears) ad bells on her galoshoes."

"Isn't that terrible," remarked the customer as she fingered the dry goods.

"It is, but most of our customers se scissors on these."

A Lament for Old Customs.

I.
Almost alone
And echoing we traipsed
Through the big gym.
Through the one lane—
Paused before the cage—
Bewildered, passed on,
With the brown slip.

II.
Where is the crowd?
The noise, the clutter, and important confusion?
Where are the long lines?
The mad rushing to and fro?
Where are the tickets, slips, cards
Where are the signatures, stamps,
and blue marks?
The muddling red tape so traditional?
And where is the braggart who dodged
Through the lanes, fell in the head
of lines,
Bribed typewriters, and came thru Sweating and proud of the day's work?
Has this brain-child of some well-
ordered mind
Done away with the nerve-racking
Yet chummy system?
The crowds, the gossip, the meeting of old friends, returning.
Another old tradition, with its red tape
Wound and put away.

III.
Out of the quiet building,
We left half doubting
The success of the plan,
And almost longing for the old custom.
Wondering if we were really registered.
