NEBRASKA TROPHIES

Since 1867, or as soon after that time as there was any degree of competition between universities for honors, the University of Nebraska has been producing athletic, forensic and other teams which have brought to the Cornhusker institution trophies and honors of various nature. All during this time, the trophies have been stored away or nearly so by being hidden in an old case in the Temple building.

Few are the students who have reviewed the gallantries of the old athletes by looking over the trophies. Yet the trophies of the past are stimulants for a greater Nebraska spirit.

Nebraska needs a large, handsome trophy case placed in a prominent place on the campus where every student who comes to the University may view the records of the past. It is probable that the case would be placed in one of the new buildings, but it is feasible that a plan could be devised for building a comparatively small building in which the trophies of the past battles can be placed. It might be that a structure with a large roof and bearing glass sides similar to the fish building at the state fair grounds would be practical as a trophy gallery. Nebraska needs a trophy exhibit and efforts should be made by the students and the university administration to secure one.

THAT IRON FENCE

For years and years—so many of them that few can remember the day on which it was put up—the University of Nebraska campus has been enclosed within a black iron fence. In the last few years only has the campus grown without the limits of this enclosure and although the greater part of the university lawn will be without the fence within a comparatively short while, the uncomplimentary railing still remains.

ADOLESCENT TRAITS

"The joy of adolescence is not the greatest joy in the world, to my mind," once spoke a college professor to a group of undergraduates. "The joy experienced through the feeling of accomplishing something well and of being a factor in a community is the first taste of true pleasure to a man. The fears of adolescence are the greatest in the world. When a young man has overcome the terror of youth he is well on the road to maturity."

These are serious thoughts for the undergraduate. Too often he believes in the "carefree joy" of fiction and gives himself little opportunity to enter into the swing of activities going on around him and thus to give himself the chance to test and know his own ability.

Only through such a process—the slight taste of experience that may be had in the student world—can a man learn to overcome the fears and terrors of youth.—Daily Illini.

The Exhaust.

I stood and gazed upon The Co-eds going out to Practice, the view being Quite worth while. Some Swagged along as if they Could run the century in Ten flat; others minced Their way as if ashamed to be Seen in Public in their Gym Outfits; Many spent most of Their time in a vain search to See if their friends were around So that they might achieve the full Measure of glory their strenuous Efforts entitle them to; A few strode As if going to their doom, heads down And scowls deeply imprinted on their Regular features; One particularly Sad dame was walking along behind Weeping you know because some fool Miscreant committed the heinous Crime of despoiling To borrow her suit and calmly Forgetting to return it. At least her Shoulders were shaking. Present Indications are that Nebraska Ought to win the telegraphic Track most easily if the girls can Run like they can talk.

Now that April is upon us, we suggest that some well-meaning person design a water-proof polo-coat. Or a rain-proof tennis outfit.

Which reminds us that some of the "fair-co-ed's" are anticipating the "Love-thirty" season, and are already in "Love" with ten or so.

And the Freshman Gym. classes are signing a petition to bar their "best beaux" from the running track.

Dearest Jane:—Back again from our last vacation and it is apparent that rising for eight o'clocks, digging around for things in books and continuing the sleep habit has lost none of its romanticism. Notice the superfluity of new spring togs—I'll bet that everyone wore their worst rags home and the family were so ashamed of them that they fixed 'em out in shining respectability.

This family affection certainly is uplifting isn't it? Dad says he wants no more monkey business and Mother says that the P's and Q's are not to be forgotten and gives you such a list of things you must tell her when you write that I think it would be a good idea to have a standard sheet mimeographed and fill out the blanks. Saw Jimmy Aimable on the train coming back. He was all crouched down in a seat and looked like the world had left him behind. Fell to talking with him and drew him out—you know the way the novelist always has the hero telling his life history to the sympathetic heroine.

"Oh, I'm too darn quiet," mourned Jimmy. "Everytime I try to put something across I fall to play up at the crucial moment. No more of the gay life for me; next year I'm going to take Law and drown my troubles or else get myself kicked out of school. Started to grow a moustache just before vacation—wasn't such a prominent one but I thought it would make a hit with Jean. Dashed up to see her the first night and just when I thought she was being impressed with my tales of the big things I was doing down here, she changes the subject entirely and says, 'Jimmy, I do believe you have a dirty face.'"

"I felt so bad that I didn't defend myself and hadn't the courage to go back to see her again. The Heck with the women," says Jimmy. I sympathized with him real sweetly and he took me to eat when we got off the train. Being of the little brother type of fellow, the Big Sister stuff got by fine. "Count your successes by your gains," said some wise bird. Your loving Bangs.

Other Worlds Than Our Own.

University of Oregon—The proposed addition of fifty cents a term to the student body fees for the purpose of providing a fund for bringing musicians to the campus was unanimously indorsed at a meeting of a representative group of students. If the proposed plan should be adopted it would be possible to bring three musicians of the highest quality each term, instead of only three or four each year as in the past year or two. In addition to this only the best would need to be signed. In case the committee should see fit to cut down on the number of concerts and bring an artist like Madame Schumann-Heink or Galli-Curi to the campus, it would be possible to do so.

Syracuse University—The Interfraternity conference has appointed a special committee to investigate the problem of the establishment of new and more fraternities at Syracuse. A survey of representative student opinion shows that a general need for more national fraternities exists while their discountenance so many locals. A local fraternity should not be organized unless with the purpose of going national. Standards should be set by which a new local fraternity could be judged before permitted to organize.

Ohio University—The Ohio State Press Association which includes in its personnel the editors and business managers of all campus publications, decided to tender a clubbing offer to university students. The offer gives a lower rate for a purchase of any two or more of the publications.

Northwestern University—The girls at Northwestern are very successful marksmen. They are holding intercollegiate matches with nearby colleges. They recently defeated Knox college with a score of 460 to 452.

University of Minnesota—By an unanimous vote, the University Senate yesterday adopted baseball as a major sport. Director Leuhring has gone to Chicago to attend a Big Ten Conference and it is rumored that the Gopher sports head will angle for the entire Indiana baseball schedule, cancelled because of the Hoosier's trip to Japan. The reinstatement of baseball at Minnesota is the first big achievement of Director Leuhring since his arrival at Minnesota as Gopher sports head.
