AG COLLEGE EXTENDS WELCOME

Tomorrow the College of Agriculture extends a welcome to every student and faculty member of the University. It urges all to forget for a day the routine of university life and take a holiday. Farmers Fair comes in the warm days of spring when books and lessons are becoming tiresome and all need to stop for a bit and relax. Just imagine for a day that you are back in the grammar school when once a year, father, mother and the children, all piled in to the family carriage or possibly the old lumber wagon and spent the day at the fair. You looked forward all year to the merry-go-round, the pink lemonade, the old fortune teller, and the funny clowns that you watched as you consumed enormous quantities of buttered popcorn and salted peanuts. But maybe you didn't have this privilege of spending a day at the fair, and you don't know all the delights its furnishes. If you didn't, the Agricultural College will give some of the thrills you missed.

Farmers Fair should mean a holiday for the whole University, but it should mean far more than this. The Agricultural College is a part of the University, as much as any college on the city campus. Many do not realize this and scarcely see the Ag campus in their four years here. The Agricultural College is seeking to overcome this disadvantage as rapidly as possible and it is hoped that Farmers Fair will strengthen the bond between the Agricultural College and the other colleges of the University. So after you have seen the Wild West Show, gazed at the freaks on the midway, have listened to the beautiful strains of the jazz band, and have enjoyed the high-class performances at the Shorphenim, just stop for a minute and look at the Ag Campus. Note the curving drives, the wide open spaces covered with bluegrass, the honeysuckles, lilacs and tulips blooming along the driveways. Notice the fine architecture and excellent arrangement of the buildings. Then remember that you have a share in all of this, that it is a part of your University.

AG COLLEGE

What is Ag College? What does it stand for? Why should it be included in the University? Did you ever stop to think that there is any special significance in the fact that one of Nebraska University's most important colleges should be an agricultural college? For years, even centuries, colleges have existed. We read of the colleges of ancient Greece and Rome and all through the years it has been possible for a few to secure a classical education. But where have we read of an agricultural college? It has only been within comparatively recent years that agricultural education has been of any importance and that the need of trained farmers and farm leaders has been recognized.

Today, in this age of rapid progress, one of the most remarkable developments has been that of agriculture. From one of the least influential and least desirable occupations, it is becoming one of the most important and most respected. The old sod shanty, the walking plow and the one-horse buggy are rapidly being replaced by the modern conveniences, improved machinery for production and the automobile. The telephone and rural free delivery have also helped to break up the isolation of the country home.

These improvements have gradually secured a higher type of population on the farms, a population which can use and demands an education to train it for the work it is to perform.

That is the reason that Ag College, while one of the youngest, is one of the most rapidly growing colleges of the University. The purpose of Ag College is to teach the best and most profitable methods of producing and caring for livestock and crops, the art of handling the new and expensive machinery which farmers must now use, the efficient management of farm business and how farm products are marketed and to teach the housewife how to make better, happier and more efficient homes. In short, the college stands for the things which make for a broader, stronger, more progressive agriculture, an agriculture which will provide a happy, wholesome rural life and at the same time effectively meet the demands of an ever-changing civilization.
