MEN! IS IT SO?

Dr. Roy C. Flickinger, speaking at Northwestern university, affirmed the other day that men do not do their best work for fear of being "shown up" by the female of the species. Men! Is that so? Do you sit around and watch your girl classmates make the brilliant recitations while you listen in just because you do not want to reveal all that you know?

Whether or not the statement of Dr. Flickinger is correct, there are certainly a great many good, logical reasons why such a condition might exist. In the first place, men, as a rule, require much of their education from life rather than books. The fellowship of others has much to do with the welfare of all successful men and it is but right that students should seek to gain knowledge by means of conversations with other men in so far as that is possible. That is the fundamental reason for which clubs and organizations of various kinds founded and the chief claim for the right to exist. It is a good reason and will stand abuse from many quarters without flinching.

But there is also another reason. Men, as a rule, do not care to work at memory assignments. They would rather get the "high spots" than get the minor details as they regard them. If they get the main points they will remember them far longer than one is liable to remember a jumble of small facts. This probably figures in largely in their lower scholarship.

But neither of these two things justify the condition. There is, however, one sound argument. Men like to do things. They do not care to spend all of their leisure hours at books. They would rather go for a hunt, fish or engage in some sport. They like to spend many hours reading magazines—an education in itself if properly directed. This is the best argument man can make in regard to a lower scholarship. He can truthfully say that his education covers a larger field than does woman's; that grades on paper are only the minor parts of one's education; and that nature and life, combined with knowledge acquired in the classroom, are the qualities which make for a successful future.

SUMMER SOCIAL LIFE

The first of summer school activities along social lines was inaugurated last Friday when the student and faculty reception was held at Ellen Smith hall and a club held a picnic for summer students. This is a good step in the right direction toward increasing interest in the summer school and should be followed up.

Next Friday the Y. W. C. A. is planning to hold an Iceland Frolic at the Ellen Smith hall. The party is open to all girls in the summer school. A royal entertainment is being planned and it will be worth every girls' while to attend the affair so as to increase her circle of acquaintances at the university.

Other clubs and societies of the school have a chance to do good work along this line during the summer. Social activities do much to increase the interest in school affairs. They should be encouraged and indulged in to a greater extent in the summer school sessions.

TRAINING OR EDUCATION?

Sitting in the smoking compartment of a Pullman car, the fat man was talking. "The trouble with colleges today is that they don't turn out enough men who know anything. The educational system of today doesn't give a man or woman any specific information that can be used in the practical business world."

"But how about poets and artists and such men?"—this from the little man in the corner near the washbasin. "A scientific or business education won't help them any." A snort from the first speaker was his only response.

Then the tall man, wearing glasses, with an academic stoop to his powerful frame, decided to break the silence: "Haven't you gentlemen some thing of a misconception of what college education really is?" Inquiry showed that neither of the former speakers was a college graduate. "It seems to me that the real purpose of higher education is not so much to give young people facts and data as it is to broaden their lives so that from a cultural and even esthetic point of view, life shall be more worth living."

And after all, the latter was right. A technical education, essential as it is, is only a means to the end of a fuller life. But the man or the woman who allows the routine and detail of a technical, or any kind of training, supplant the desire for a quest of knowledge, is lost in a world of figures and facts—University of Cincinnati News.

WHERE THEY ARE WHAT THEY DO

The Louisiana Ragadors, composed of Jack Adams, Tudor Gardner, "Bob" Powell and C. B. Phillips, are playing at King's park in Norfolk this summer.

Charles C. Wiles is playing a solo xylophone with a vaudeville company which will play throughout the middle west this summer. They will perform in Omaha and Kansas City.

George Salter is on a short camping trip this week.

Prof. and Mrs. Herbert Brownell have gone to New York for the summer to visit their daughter Louise, an alumnus of the University of Nebraska.

Professor Linder of the Havelock public schools is assisting Dr. Lida Earhart in summer school classes.

Mr. Rosenlof is assisting Prof. Brooks in summer school classes.

Mr. Dunn of Lincoln High School is associated with Professor Lanz in the work of summer school.

Prof. C. E. Mickey, head of the civil engineering department, attended the convention of the American association of engineers at Salt Lake City. He is going to Los Angeles for the Shrine convention. He will spend the remainder of the summer on a road survey going north along the coast into Canada and returning by way of Minneapolis.
