

ALUMNI TRYING TO LOCATE EX-STUDENTS

Harold Holtz' Office Conducting a Campaign to Find Former Nebraskans Thruout State

The University of Nebraska Alumni Association is now in the midst of a systematic campaign by which they hope to locate all ex-students of the university. Until about a year ago no efforts were made to keep "tab" on the former Cornhuskers and now the university is endeavoring to make up for lost time.

The campaign is well under way already. Lists of the students who came to Nebraska from different towns in the state are being sent to the newspaper of the town from where they came and to some well known citizen of the town. In this way the alumni office hopes to secure the correct addresses of all former students at Nebraska.

There are more than 30,000 graduates and ex-students of the university. Until the alumni association offices were moved from the basement of administration to the Law building, the equipment for taking care of all these records was incomplete. When the new offices in the Law building were secured, enough files were purchased and installed to enable systematic records to be kept of all graduates and ex-students for years to come.

Keep Records Until Death

Records of all graduates and ex-students of the university are kept from the time they leave the university until their death. Even then the record of their death is kept in the files so that inquiries about any students of the past can be answered in short order—by simply looking them up in the files.

A continuous round of unknowns is always present in the alumni association files. Many former students do not take the time or the bother to inform the association of their whereabouts and when inquiries at their last address fails to bring results they are switched over into the unknown list. Then, whenever any word of their location is secured, an inquiry is sent to the new address and providing an answer is secured their names are again put among the known. Some names switch from known to unknown and back again many times simply because the graduates fail to inform the alumni of their activities.

UNKNOWN LISTS BEING CLEARED

Alumni Office Daily Receiving Answers to Inquiries About "Lost" Former Students

Every day there comes into the office of the University of Nebraska Alumni Association a number of answers to inquiries about "lost" students. Every day a number of cards are shifted from the unknown to the known lists.

The replies are those coming from a pamphlet sent out to all known alumni. The pamphlets bear the names of all alumni who now occupy the unknown list. The names are arranged in classes and it takes but a few minutes for alumni to look the lists over and see how many of the "lost" alumni they know.

The list was to have been ready in time to distribute among the alumni who attended the Cornhusker Round-up in June, but the printers failed to deliver them until the following week and the lists had to be mailed.
