

NEARLY ALL FARMS HAVE NEWSPAPERS

Survey Discloses Only One Out of Forty Rural Homes Receives no
Periodical

Practically every farmer in Nebraska is supplied with periodicals today, according to the results of a survey made by the agricultural experiment station of the University of Nebraska and the United States department of agriculture. Only one out of forty rural homes is without a newspaper or publication.

The great bulk of the publications were found to be country weeklies or dailies published in Lincoln, Omaha or Kansas City. Farm papers reached three out of each of the four homes studied. Many received more than one.

The vast majority of farm papers were published in Nebraska or neighboring states.

Next to the children, the housewife, especially of tenants, is least well provided with reading matter, the survey shows. Only sixteen different women's magazines were reported in 304 of the 1,034 homes investigated. Enough homes receive more than one woman's magazine to bring the average to three out of every four farm homes without a woman's magazine.

An almost total absence of periodicals for the use of the younger members of the family was disclosed. Only four children's publications with but thirty-one subscriptions reached the 1,034 homes, less than one paper in thirty-three homes. Sunday school papers probably make up a part of the difference.
