STANDING BY

The success of any enterprise is measured by the support received from those directly interested and concerned. The attitude of a country is "standing by" its army contributes greatly to the morale of that body. Moral gives backbone and bids fair for success. A country is judged by the patriotism of its citizens, a community by the progressiveness of its members, and a university by the loyalty of its students.

Loyalty is a splendid selling agency and there is no finer advertisement. Especially is university loyalty a selling agency among other schools and prospective students, and the students owe it to the taxpayers who support this institution to boost it in every way possible. As long as they benefit of its teachings without charge, surely that is the least that can be expected of them in return.

One of the best ways in which students can evidence their loyalty is by their interest in college athletics and the competitive games. It is not a forced interest either, for there is nothing more exciting or attractive than a college against college athletic contest.

Funds are required to finance these contests, and the admission charges are the largest source of revenue. In order to ask these charges a minimum to the students, season athletic tickets, which sell for a great deal less than the total gate admission price, are offered. They are a bargain in every sense of the word, and every student ought to buy one without hesitation.

Young people are generally looking for thrills, and a football game is the best place on earth to get them. The surge of pride that sweeps over one as he watches his team in great suspense and then sees them emerge victorious is unequalled anywhere. Those that have never felt it have missed something that the initiated always cherish as a college memory. To see the team in action is ten fold more interesting than reading the most glowing accounts of it afterward.

Everyone who buys a season athletic ticket will be doing three things—he will be doing his duty to those who are asking possible the privileges that he enjoys at the university; he will be doing a pleasurable duty to the college of his choice; and he will be making himself a better Nebraskan for having done so.

SCHOLARSHIP AWARDS

Announcements of the innovation of scholarship awards in the colleges of Business Administration and Law have been received with great enthusiasm, not only by students in these colleges, but also by the public. The value of these awards is equally great to both.

Research work in various branches of business and economics may now be carried out by graduate students who otherwise might have been unable to return to the University. Likewise, law students who might have been compelled to postpone or abandon the continuance of their courses, will receive the benefits of the scholarships in their colleges. Awards have been made to ten deserving law students, by the Board of Regents, while four business administration graduate students will be enabled to do research work during the coming year.

The credit is due, in the case of the college of Business Administration to a number of Lincoln people who donated scholarships. Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon the people responsible for these scholarships, which are a distinct credit to the University of Nebraska.

HUMANITY

There is a course of study, too often overlooked by college students, yet of sufficient importance to insure success in any field of life. It has no prerequisites; it requires no burning of midnight oil; it has absorbed the interest of the world's greatest thinkers; it is problematic and mysterious. That study is human nature.

At all times we are in contact with it and are witnessing its manifestations but never do we solve its subtleties completely. The few who have partially understood human nature have capitalized their knowledge. It has brought them fame and fortune. It can be taken advantage of in every walk of life. The lecturer must know what emotions and instincts to appeal to, officers must train their soldiers to take fighting spirit, politicians must acquaint themselves with crowd psychology, and authors and writers to be successful must know what people like.

The secret if there is a secret connected with the study of human nature, lies in observation and reflection. Human interest in human nature is proverbial. Poetry, art, and literature are interesting mainly because they present the mysteries of man in some new form. But not all knowledge of human nature is to be gained through books. It is a case of observing keenly, and of analyzing the actions of people with whom we are associated. Human beings, of all races and of all countries are essentially alike. To know one is to know all.—Daily Iowan.
