OPENING NUMBER COMING

Nebraska Publication to Rate High With Comic Monthlies in the United States

"Old Man Awgwan," the Nebraska comedy character, who appears in person under the guise of the comic publication sponsored by Sigma Delta Chi, is about ready to greet Nebraska students and drive away any cloud of sadness that might be prevalent in the Cornhusker school.

Humorous stories, yes, verses and clever poems together with a large quantity of the latest art work, has been put in the printers' hands for preparation and publication. The staff has been working for a good part of the summer on the publication and the results are characterized "first rate" by all who have managed to get a glimpse at the copy.

"Old Man Awgwan," himself in person is scheduled to introduce the "Opening Number" on the campus. His long grey hair and sparkling eyes will beam out from under the first pile of the magazines that arrive on the campus while he sits all day long in a booth erected for him.

Students are requested to prepare for the coming of the Nebraska comic and to welcome it with the same zeal afforded the recent Athletic Season ticket drive.

As a national publication, "Awgwan" is rated among the very best in the United States. The material is quoted in all the best magazines—yet in the past the majority of the circulation has been going to other schools and not to Nebraskans.

"It is about time," says the editor, "that Nebraska students realize they have an institution of national importance on the campus and they should learn to support it."

The "Opening Number" of Awgwan will be given with each subscription as it is sold on the Nebraska campus.

Newspapers Go to Nearly All Farms In the Country

Practically every farmer in Nebraska is supplied with periodicals today, according to the results of a survey made by the agricultural experiment station of the University of Nebraska and the United States department of agriculture. Only one out of forty rural homes is without a newspaper or publication.

The great bulk of the publications were found to be country weeklies or dailies published in Lincoln, Omaha or Kansas City. Farm papers reached three out of each of the four homes studied. Many received more than one.

The vast majority of farm papers were published in Nebraska or neighboring states.

Next to the children, the housewife, especially of tenants, is least well provided with reading matter, the survey shows. Only sixteen different women's magazines were reported in 304 of the 1,034 homes investigated. Enough homes receive more than one woman's magazine to bring the average to three out of every four farm homes without a woman's magazine.

An almost total absence of periodicals for the use of the younger members of the family was disclosed. Only four children's publications with but thirty-one subscriptions reached the 1,034 homes, less than one paper in thirty-three homes. Sunday school papers probably make up a part of the difference.

Russian Boots

The Bolshevettes are invading the campus, accompanied by the flip, flop of Russian boots. They seem to be the fad this year and a number of pretty coeds are enjoying them to the full. Marjorie Cooper, a Lincoln girl sports a keen pair of black and tan ones the tops of which may be worn either up or down as the wearer pleases, and Esther Stevens, a freshman from Humdoldt, Iowa, proceeds gaily about in a pair of gray and-black ones. Edna Dipple of Bridgeport, Nebraska, favors a black and tan combination while Blenne Carpenter who hales from Wichita, Kansas, has a pair of all-black ones.

"I love 'em," declared Marguerite Manger of Lincoln. "They're so easy to get on in the morning. And there aren't any laces to tie or break." She has a pair of black and tan boots. How the fad started is not definitely known, but it is believed that the first pair appeared one rainy day. At any rate, the boots have made quite a hit with the campus.

spending his annual vacation in the Moosehead country had engaged the services of an old French Canadian as his guide. The sportsman liked to ask the old man questions about the different objects that attracted his attention. Happening to notice a clump of cranberry vines on the shore of the lake, he asked the old man what they were and whether they were good to eat. "Good to eat? Well, I should say so. You take that little cranberry and stew him, she makes just as good apple sauce as prunes."—Youth's Companion.
