WIN AN "N."

An "N" is unquestionably the highest honor that is awarded at the University. Every man who enters Nebraska would rather leave this institution a possessor of the coveted "N" than all the other honors which the University can give him.

When the subject of letters is discussed, Cornhuskers will declare, almost without exception, that if they could win their "N's" they would go forth from the University satisfied.

In years past, the only way that a letter could be won at Nebraska was through a demonstration of physical prowess in athletics in one form or another. A man had to have the wonderful physical build that so few are blessed with in order to win an "N".

Fortunately, such is not the case this year. At last the Cornhusker who lacks the physical ability to win an "N" has an opportunity to earn his letter. This chance for an "N" has been made possible by the installation of the student manager system in athletics by Director of Athletics Dawson.

Despite the wonderful opportunity to win an "N" that this system offers, but a very few sophomores, seven, in fact, have applied for the position of sophomore candidate in football.

In the East, and in all the larger schools in the country, the position of student manager is recognized as one of the biggest honors in school, and one who wins a letter in this manner is esteemed equally with one who wins a letter through actual participation in athletics.

Wake up, sophomores! Get out and earn the position of student manager, and go forth from Nebraska a wearer of the honored "N."

THE WELCOME.

That lonesome feeling which new students without acquaintances or friends experience on entering college should be greatly alleviated if not entirely gone after such a week of welcome as was accorded the Nebraska freshmen.

It takes a great deal of work to put across such an undertaking. Splendid organization is necessary for staging the barbecue which completed the festivities of the week.

But it takes something more than just work to make the week a success. It takes true Cornhusker spirit. And Nebraska men showed last week that they have this spirit.

LOWER CLASS SOCIETIES JUSTIFIED.

The Iron Sphinx deserve felicitations on the huge success of their freshmen welcome barbecue Friday night. The Sphinx of this year succeeded, as no other organization has succeeded before, in giving the new students a warm greeting and making them feel the spirit of old Nebraska.

It is to be hoped that the Sphinx will carry out through the year, other enterprises equally worth, and that the other honorary organizations will do the same. Let nobody forget, either, that it took several months of planning, organizing and strenuous work on the part of the members, to say nothing of the advice and helpful co-operation lent by the Innocents and other societies, to make possible the welcome week which had its climax in the fun-fest Friday night.

As long as these class societies are engaged in projects of this nature they are fulfilling their purpose and are an asset to the University. The criticism made in the past, that the lower-class societies were unworthy of their place, if it ever was true, certainly is not true today. Nebraska needs organizations that will be active in unifying the student body and in effectively promoting all worthy student activities. Toward this end the Iron Sphinx have aimed and finally triumphed.

both England and America. Some time ago the people of England accepted and erected a statue of Lincoln facing Westminster Abbey given by America and a bust at Washington in St. Paul's cathedral near the monuments of Nelson and Wellington. These distinguished visitors have now come to up to present on behalf of their country a statue of William Pitt in the city of Pittsburgh, a bust of Lord Bryce and a statue of Edmund Burke both in the city of Washington.

"Inasmuch as I understand that this is the first stopping point of our guests in this state, I may without impropriety welcome you to a state that is always interested in agriculture and periodically interested in politics and I have no doubt that the suggestion of these two topics will strike a responsive chord, for I have seldom known a man in public life from any part of the British empire who was not profoundly interested in the first and unusually well-informed in regard to the second topic that I have mentioned.

"We live here in an agricultural section where one may drive several hundred miles in any direction without passing any territory not fitted for agricultural purposes. Land of mineral fertility where the use of mineral fertilizers is unknown and where the abundance or lack of water is the controlling factor in agricultural productivity. I welcome you to the seat of an educational institution where in the words of one of my predecessors, 'Culture and agriculture are among our chief interests.' I welcome you to a section of the country where we freely acknowledge that world politics and the international point of views have not been highly cultivated and on this point particularly we expect to gain much from the brief association with you and words that you may speak in our presence.

"My earliest boyish attempts to orient myself in the world were full of confusion. I knew that I lived in the United States and was an American; that I spoke the English language and that England was in Britain and Britain was a part of the British empire; that to the north of us were Canadians, some of whom spoke English and some French, though all belonged to the British empire. As I have followed the rise and fall of empires and the changing map of the world I feel almost as confused as I did in trying to place myself in my boyhood. However, among the medley of voices that come from India and from the Philippine Islands from Africans under the British flag and from Americans of negro descent, from capitalist propaganda and proletarian clamor, one fact it seems to me is clear in the minds of all right thinking people of both countries. There ought to be a permanent intellectual, and may I say spiritual, entente among all thinking people who speak the English language whether it be the language of the island itself, its provinces or of the United States where we retain in our speech along with some strange additions certain Elizabethan expressions that now sound strange in the home of the Tudors. This entente (I would almost call it an alliance) should be not primarily agreements in regard to future contingencies, but rather the cultivation of the spirit of helpfulness, a willingness of applaud when one does his best, a willingness to be charitable when the ideal is not attainable, in this spirit we University people recognize, applaud, and to the best of our ability appropriate the results of your scholarship and your intellectual advancement. In a spirit of friendly rivalry we also wish to advance and give you freely the benefit of our educational progress. In this spirit we as citizens applaud the broad wisdom of your colonial policy. We hope for the pacification of Ireland and the ultimate contentment of India just as we crave your sympathetic attitude toward us in our lesser Filipino troubles and in our greater domestic racial problems. As men of thought we recognize that nothing is gained by indulging in American flamboyancy or by alleged Killingsque discussions of what we did or what we did not do, or what we might have done, in the late war.

"In my work of administering the affairs of the University, I often remark that I would rather help build a tradition than secure an enactment, for traditions are tenacious of life and unfortunately in America enactments are frequently forgotten ever before they are repealed. I hope, then, that your visit may do much to forward the formation of an altruistic entente among thinking men of both countries, that the impelling thought will be the just and peaceful advancement of the English-speaking peoples, and of all peoples. Such co-operation among English speaking peoples would do much to rid this troubled world of jealousy, strife and hatred. I rejoice that your government has just taken a stand in regard to the Turks that has called out the approval of both Senator Lodge and our own Senator Hitchcock. Is this not evidence that the hoped-for entente is already a going concern?

"Having spent nearly half of my life in the middle west, I know quite well that when distinguished guests from abroad are present those assembled to hear them wish most of all for brevity on the part of the one who endeavors to do the local honors. I would, therefore, close with the remark that our homes and hearts are open to receive our distinguished visitors and that it is our great desire to offer you our heartfelt appreciation in return for the inspiration of their words and presence."
