Ames Takes Harrier Meet From Nebraska

Ames ran away with the cross-country meet with the Cornhusker harriers held at Ames Saturday morning. Although the star Ames runner, Captain Rathbun, did not make the race, the six Nebraska runners trailed the Ames distance men on every case. Ames carried off the first six places, making a clean sweep of the places.

The next meet on the cross-country program is the Missouri Valley race.

IMMIGRATION AND BLOLOGY.

Frederick C. Howe for some years Commissioner of Immigration at the Port of New York, writing in the September Scribners, foresees a time a decade hence when this country will be seriously short of unskilled workers, because immigration has been shut off. By 1923, he says, many of those now working in the mills, mines, factories and farms will have grown old. The places of three million unskilled workers must then be filled by Americans.

This is an economic argument for immigration, which, no doubt, will be advanced with great insistence and plausibility, as the gates are closed more tightly. But it is a dangerous half-truth that should be balanced and offset by evidence from the biologists and psychologists. Biology goes more deeply into this problem than does economics.

Contrast the statement of Mr. Howe with that of Lewis Madison Terman, of the University of California, in the current World's Work. Professor Terman cites the administrations of anthropologists and psychologists that there is a vast difference between the native mental capacities of races and national groups. Mental tests for example, show that the intellectual capacity of the American Indian has been greatly over-rated, even as that of the Mexican.

Now, this is not merely theory and speculation. The practical point is that this country has too long not only admitted inferior racial stocks from southern Europe, but accepted them from the lower social strata.

If the United States is to maintain a fair average of blood and intelligence in its people, it must consider something besides economic motives and pressures. No adequate view of the problem is possible without taking into consideration the biological factors.

Degeneration awaits the American, if he dilutes his blood by too much infusion from inferior sources. It also awaits him, if he becomes only a brainworker, too. America, must look to its germ plasma, to its racial make-up, if it values its future and wishes to survive as a nation fit for its great mission in the world.—Minneapolis Journal.
