CHAMPS.

Again the Nebraska team has carried off the honors in the race for the championship of the Missouri Valley Conference. Many teams would consider it an honor to capture the prize and we accept it casually in fact. There are nine teams in the conference and there are nine teams striving to win the pennant. Isn't it quite an honor to defeat every contender so decisively? Pause a moment and think what a team Nebraska must have to win the coveted banner year after year.

BEAT NOTRE DAME.

Do you know that one of the greatest football games in the United States will be played on Nebraska Field Thanksgiving day? Do you know that the Nebraska team will be required to put up the greatest fight in gridiron history if Notre Dame is to go home vanquished? If you know this, then you are ready to go to that game and root for Nebraska as you never rooted before.

The eyes of the football world will be watching the battle in Lincoln when Notre Dame invades the Scarlet and Cream territory to beat Nebraska. The team is ready to repulse the attack. Are you ready?

Year after year the South Bend team has trampled the Scarlet and Cream to the earth. Time after time they have snatched a victory from the Huskers and they mean to duplicate their feat this year.

On your toes now and back the old colors, Cornhuskers. The supreme moment will decide whether Nebraska shall be called the "Wonder Team" or not. And a "Wonder Team" needs a "Wonder Student Body."

"LEST WE FORGET."

In looking over the Brown University Herald, we have run across the following comment on the Huskers' invasion of Syracuse this year:

"Every fall we in the East are subjected to a flood of propaganda about middle-western and far-western football. Pseudo-experts from the provinces tell fabulous tales of the achievements of their local heroes, and we have listened for so long that we half believe some of their stuff. This year Princeton beat Chicago in spite of the middle-western hot air blasts, and last Saturday, Nebraska was defeated and outplayed by Syracuse after they had boasted that they could 'lick Syracuse, Yale, Harvard and Penn State on successive Saturdays and still have enough pep to finish off Cornell and the Army.' That section of the country should quit football and establish an intercollegiate blowing league."

First of all we would like to explain to the would-be humorous editor of the Brown Herald that he straighten out his wires, which are badly twisted. A St. Louis coach made the unwarranted statement that Nebraska could beat Harvard, Yale and Centre on successive days, but nothing of the sort emanated from the Nebraska camp. We do venture to suggest that our sarcastic critics from Brown would do well to journey fearlessly into the provinces and learn how to get facts straight.

Secondly, we fail to understand how the Brown Herald editor can kid himself into believing Eastern football superior to that of the West. Perhaps his memory has failed him that he does not remember how Nebraska beat Syracuse in 1919, Rutgers in 1920, and Pittsburgh in 1921. Perhaps he has forgotten what Notre Dame did to the Army in 1921, and how Chicago beat Princeton last year. If his memory is good, perhaps he can remember way back when an eastern team has defeated Notre Dame. Also, according to the records in the provinces, Centre won a 6 to 0 victory from Harvard in 1921.

But forgetting all about last year's games, and looking at the record this year, surely our Eastern friend has not forgotten that Iowa, far from being the strongest team in the provinces, defeated Yale, one of the strongest teams in the East, but a few weeks ago.

"Lest we forget, lest we forget."

DEVELOPMENT.

The two principles upon which man may shape his life are, according to Sherwood Eddy, the principle of the life of God or the principle of the life of man. Life according to the first principle has been called the life of the golden rule, and the life built upon the second, the life of the rule of God.

On every side there are manifestations of the development of the material things of life. The never-ceasing struggle for newer, better things consume the energy of the race and wears away in its mad, endless round, the lives of men. All this for the sake of a few years of earthly enjoyment, for the sake of an uncertain luxurious existence which will terminate in itself. There are the principles of the life of man illustrated. Possessions, not manhood but money; strife, the survival of the fittest; profit, dollar-chasing; and selfishness, every man for himself.

The progress of the race is measured by the spiritual development of its people. Although the educated being is not necessarily the more spiritual being, yet education tends to inspire a self-consciousness that discloses to man the more than the material side of his existence. But the revelation does not come without thought. Descartes said, "I think, hence I am," and just so it is through thinking that the soul is taught to rise to a higher plain, to the enlightenment that reveals the joy of life according to the golden rule. The outstanding factors are personality, brotherhood and service, with the outgrowing principles of liberty, justice and love.

The inevitable course of destiny sweeps man ever downward toward eternity. The man who has lived as he would we should live, sees in its course the approach to eternal life. He who has shaped and lived his life on the doctrine of materialism sees only that his quest is ending and he knows not where to turn. Surely then, education is not complete unless it has led the spirit as well as the mind and shown the way to the great spiritual goal.

Have you learned, or are you beginning to see the pathway? There is a call now to join the multitude who are traveling that way. Will you not enroll, or if you have lagged behind, revive the spirit that has grown faint?

The call of the youth of today is not the "gather your rosebuds" of Epicureanism, but "Remember the Creator."

The Corn Cob Club, pep organization of Nebraska, with its forty live members, takes charge of the stunts and fosters all other pep demonstrations. It corresponds to the pep clubs that are in existence that all the schools of the Valley which are doing much in promoting fine spirit between the schools.

The Chief Cob, R. F. Millham of Lincoln, former Kemper Military Academy football star, was injured in the late war so that he could not continue in athletics so he puts all his fight into the pep organization. Due to their excellent leadership and to the enthusiasm of the members of the club, the Corn Cobs have been very successful in their four appearances on the home field and at Kansas. The stunts which they put on were clever and their enthusiasm was so contagious that football games have increased in popularity.

The trouts are over and the inter-class debate teams are picked. Within a month we shall have the opportunity to hear the contesting teams maintain their own when they are pitted against each other in the first round of the championship fray, between now and that time we may confidently expect that at least twelve debaters will be unceasingly plugging away in their endeavors to produce four water-proof, air-tight, arguments.

The student body does not appreciate, when it hears a finished debate, the effort that has been expended to produce it. First, the debater must gain a wide general knowledge of his subject. To get this he must read extensively. Second, he must weigh or shift his material, sort out the important, condense much of it, and weed out altogether that which is superfluous. Third, he must carefully analyze the question, pick his special issues, and brief his argument. Fourth, he must write a speech and learn it. Fifth, he must be prepared to answer extemporaneously his opponents' arguments.

Sixth, he must practice and cultivate an easy, graceful, style of delivery. All of this goes into the preparation of a high-class debate. The hearers often describe the debater whom they hear as being a gifted artist though rarely is this the case. More often his success is due to the application of hard, grueling work.

We should all of us look forward to the coming contests with anticipation. Every student should be interested in the question up for discussion. The modern college legislator does not argue over such things as "How Many Angels Can Dance on the Point of a Needle?" or "Is the Horse a More Valuable Member of Society than the Cow?" or "Was Noah Justified in building the Ark?" Instead he argues live, juicy, questions that interest every keen and practical thinker. The soldier bonus is just such a question.

The teams are off to a running start. Those fortunate enough to have won positions last week deserve congratulations. They have an excellent opening into debating circles and some of them should and undoubtedly will in the future win varsity debating honors.

Dear Editor: Your editorial on Penmanship in Wednesday's Daily Nebraskan was interesting. Permit me to say, however, that a course in penmanship in the University would be a waste of time on the part of the student since the rapidity with which notes must be taken would soon nullify any improvement made by a student in the penmanship course. Again, rapid writing of examination papers is another cause of poor hand-writing on the part of most college students. Less finer work and more brain work will improve penmanship in the University.

Yours very truly,

MISER SCRIPTOR.

DOPE UPSET IN ANNUAL CLASSIC

Harvard Defeats Sons of Eli 10 to 3 in a Bitter Fight

In the forty-first contest between Harvard and Yale, the Crimson eleven upset the dope by trimming the sons of old Eli, 10 to 3, in a hard-fought contest. The victory of Harvard leaves the eastern football title in doubt, although Princeton, who has defeated Yale, has the best claim to the title. Harvard has already lost to Brown, and so has no claim to the title.

Story of the game: The Yale and Harvard university football teams completed their schedules for the season by meeting here today in their annual gridiron classic. It was the forty-first game between the two institutions since 1875.

A capacity throng of more than 76,000 spectators filled the huge Yale football amphitheatre to overflowing.

Weather conditions were more ideal for the players than for the spectators. A piercing wind mounting almost to a gale, swept the gridiron. Overhead the sun shone.

The Harvard football squad of more than fifty players came on the field at 1:30 sharp for a final warming-up.

The playing field was bare of grass around midfield and appeared to be a trifle slow and heavy. Kicking with the gale, Harvard punters averaged between 50 and 60 yards.

It was stated unofficially that when the Harvard eleven came on the field the players would be num-

Correct this sentence: "The wife confessed her indiscretions to him and he forgave her." This is the age of memoirs and naughty novels. The next logical step is naughty memoirs.

Life is usually that way, and the postage-due letter is seldom worth the extra two cents. Modern art has its little faults, but it hasn't yet given us a canvas entitled: "Madonna with a Cigarette."
