The personality of many professors in school is worth more to a student in contact with them than the courses themselves. The broad scope of knowledge, the little sketches of human nature that crop out, the displays of the character of the person, inevitably settle on the student leaving an impression that makes a man educated, that makes him deserving of the title of a college graduate.

There are men in school who would be doing inestimable good to society while they allowed to teach each day whatever they felt in the mood to teach, or talk about whatever the occasion warranted. The late Professor Dann is an excellent example of such an instructor. His influence over his students was remarkable for the fine culture which they gained by contact with the man. He must have realized that the real education was not the confinement to a text but the one that taught a student a love of the beautiful.

Some courses in school are sadly lacking in culture, others confine the student to a narrow scope of knowledge and leave the graduate in a sphere out of which he cannot possibly enjoy the benefits of his education. Time that one must spend in college, and is able to spend, limits the amount of work that he can take and it is all limited to his major course. The professors are demanding that those who would enter them have the education not only of that work but also of enough other work to make them valuable adjuncts to the society in which they live. Their strength gained through respect gives them the power to set the standards and they have set them well. When more of them ask that the application for admission to cultured as well as educated for his work then the Universities shall contain such men as Professor Dann who will be ready to offer work of the broadest nature.

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT.
Christmas is just one day, but the spirit of Christmas begins long before and lasts long after that date. There is something in the atmosphere of all December that seems to breathe of the joy of the coming anniversary of the nativity of our Savior.

These cold starry nights are filled with the calmness that means peace and good will, and the silence that reigns with the darkness fairly throbs with the beautiful anticipation of the nearing climax of the season of happiness and good cheer.

Christmas time is a season of spiritual as well as of physical delight and, since the very foundation of life is spiritual, therein lies the reason for the completeness of the happiness of the Yule time.

The bonds of universal human brotherhood never seem closer than at this time. The greatness and the strength of this tie that binds men together in Christian love becomes apparent, and the everlasting love of Him most manifest. It is a beautiful fact that this common love exists in the inner, better selves of even those that war and in spite of the strife and dissension that eternally exists among men.

Christmas comes but once a year, but the influence of the fine things that it inspires among men continues through the following year.

SUPPORT INTER-CLASS DEBATE.
Should the United States government grant a bonus to the world war veterans? The four class debating teams will cross intellectual swords over this question Tuesday night. For over month, the twelve speakers and their alternates have been busily engaged searching for and arraying evidence, outlining speeches, and preparing refutation. When they meet Tuesday night they will present to their hearers arguments which are the result of careful and intensive study.

It is amazing how little the average student knows about public questions such as the bonus. A surface, superficial, knowledge is all most of us possess. It is, in fact, most difficult to form any kind of intelligent opinion upon the questions before the world today, without deep research and thought.

It has been the experience of the debaters themselves that after thoroughly investigating a subject, they are often led to change entirely the opinion they previously held. To get at the facts, the cold-blooded facts—that is one of the chief jobs of a debater. The same should be the job of every student who would have a true conception of present-day problems.

How much do you know about the bonus? You are for it or against it, but WHY? Do you think the government is morally bound to compensate the soldiers? Do you have any idea where the money to pay it would come from?

Students! Let's wake up and take an interest in public questions. There are indications that we are coming out of the lethargy regarding public affairs in which we have been. The formation of the Forum is a good sign, but it is only one where there should be many. The hearty support by the student body of these inter-class debates will signify that student interest in live-wire topics is now awakening.

No one after seeing the costumes and the stunts at the Girls' Cornhusker party would dare make the assertion that University women lack imagination and creative ability.

The men's Cornhusker banquet attained the same high level of University spirit, which has been manifest throughout the season.

Contemporary Opinion

"The importance of international co-operation outside the sphere of politics," writes Bertrand in his book "Political Ideals," "has been brought home to me by my own experience. I was until lately engaged in teaching a new science, which few men in the world were able to teach. My own work in this science was based chiefly upon the work of a German and an Italian. My pupils came from all over the civilized world: France, Germany, Australia, Russia, Greece, Japan, China, India—and America. We felt ourselves an outpost of civilization, building a new road into the virgin forest of the unknown. All co-operated in the common task—and all in the interest of such a work the political enemies of nations seemed trivial, temporary, and futile. But it is not only in the somewhat rarefied atmosphere of abstruse science that international co-operation is vital to the progress of civilization. All our economic problems, all the questions of securing the rights of labour, all the hopes of freedom at home and humanity abroad rest upon the creation of international good will."

We quote this page in full because of its extreme significance at the present moment to us at McGill. "The necessity of the task of promoting international good-will should be recognized by all; and the role of paramount importance which the universities can play in bringing about such a spirit is here shown in the light of a personal experience. This is the best answer to those who feel that the question of foreign scholarships that is now before the Students' Council should be limited to students of par own religion and political way of thinking. There is between us and such students as these no differences of jealousies, suspicions, or misunderstandings to be dispelled; and, on the other hand, it is the very students who will contribute and receive the greatest benefit from such an exchange of scholarships as has been proposed. There is still something of hatred, suspicion and fear dominating our mutual feeling, and just so long as such a condition is permitted to exist, we cannot hope to escape the dread of violence and war.

We in the Canadian universities have been presented with an opportunity of showing our lively interest in the question of international peace, and of taking the first step in what may well prove an epoch-making international movement. It is from the college men that tomorrow's leaders of the world are to come, and it is among college men that feelings of racial fellowships must be stimulated. And however we may criticize the minor details of the proposed plan of petitioning the Dominion Government to provide international scholarships, let us make certain that the students of McGill do not neglect so great an opportunity of demonstrating their concern in such vital matters of international education, peace, and good-will—McGill Daily.
