The absence of Dr. Paul Ivey from the University for an indeterminate time as announced yesterday will be regretted by hundreds of students who have come in contact with his personality during his stay at Nebraska during the last four years.

May success and worthwhile accomplishment continue in his new work. The faculty of the College of Business Administration in a farewell party to Dr. Ivey last evening expressed the hope that he might find it possible to return to his class work there within a short time.

Did you know that the author of "Town and Gown," a recent book written to portray American college life, was a former Nebraska student?

Lynn Montross, who published the book as a climax to his successful work as a Chicago author and newspaperman, entered school here in 1914. He also attended Illinois University and scenes from the book are said to be taken from Nebraska and Illinois campuses.

Mr. Montross came to Nebraska University from Pierce high school and later served in the American army in France. His wife was a student at Illinois University. He has had several stories published in "Smart Set" and is planning another book to appear next year.

Sensational reports of University expenditures from the special University committee of the House yesterday were too general to be credited until further information has been announced. If useless expense can be uncovered by the committee, no true friend of the University can object to a quiet and careful checking of accounts.

Flashy statements of "big things to come" will lower the regard in which investigators are held by taxpayers rather than cause them to condemn or praise without foundation.

The University Glee Club this week is doing a fine piece of advertising for this school. The splendid programs which have been given in western Nebraska and in Colorado should do much to create a true and favorable impression of student activities on the campus. When it becomes possible to send such organizations as the University Players and Kosmet Klub out into the state on a sound financial basis, some erroneous impressions regarding student life here will be corrected.

On March 15 at Northwestern University, representatives of more than two dozen mid-western schools will meet to discuss problems of student government and activities. Is Nebraska to have a representative there?

Last year a member of the Student Council was sent to the convention and helpful suggestions as to changes in student organizations have come this year as a result of that visit. So far, action this year as to sending a delegate has been held up for no apparent reason. Immediate response to the invitation of the Conference is to be expected if we wish a solution of troublesome student problems.

Campus Comment

"Alpha of Nebraska chapter of Phi Beta Kappa to protest against the overshadowing of scholarly interests by commercial athletic interests in the Alumni Office at the University of Nebraska. It formulates this protest apropos of its inability to secure help from the office in obtaining the addresses of its alumni members for the national catalogue of the organization, now being prepared. The list of names and addresses of Nebraska alumni members should be as complete and accurate for the University of Nebraska as for other institutions. Yet it will be neither of these. In past years the chapter obtained help readily from the office, although it had a much smaller personnel. In the many visits of members of the chapter to the office during the present year they were met invariably by "We have no time for Phi Beta Kappa. We are busy about the football stadium."

Alpha of Nebraska chapter regrets that the type of alumni of whom the institution (according to the purpose of its foundation) should be proudest is the type in which least interest seems to be taken at the present time."

Nebraskan Campaign Closes Today at Six

Today is the last opportunity that Nebraska students will have to subscribe to the Daily Nebraskan for the second semester. Distribution of papers to those students who have not subscribed for the Nebraskan this semester will be discontinued before the end of the week. In an advertisement elsewhere in this paper a list of the subscriptions that have expired is published. The subscription price of the Nebraskan is $1.25 a semester. The subscription campaign yesterday was in charge of Josephine Shramek. Booths were maintained in the Library, in "U" Hall, and in Social Science building. Miss Shramek will also have charge of the subscription campaign today.
