"No American university can grow in numbers or in spirit, as it should, without a stadium as an adequate forum for the expression of its community of effort, spirit and activity."—John T. Tigert, U. S. Commissioner of Education.

The spelling tests which were given yesterday in all ten o'clock classes made us think we were back in the sixth grade. It is rumored that the reason the tests were given was to show that the spelling of college students was better than ever before. If this can be shown, the prevalent idea that University men and women cannot and do not care to learn to spell, will be thoroughly disproved.

Do we need a new gymnasium? There are not even enough good seats in the Armory to accommodate the crowds at the interfraternity basketball, to say nothing of the varsity contests.

If intra-mural sports are to grow at Nebraska—and that is the present aim of leading college coaches and athletic directors of the country—we must have a big increase in our facilities for indoor sports. Don't forget to mention this to your friends in the legislature.

For the past year a series of articles has been running in "Smart Set," concerning the various American colleges. "Smart Set" is not noted as an ultra-conservative magazine and is inclined to look with a rather cynical smile at all our institutions. However, this publication is not alone in its condemnation of the results of the American college system. By many of the so-called progressive thinkers of this country and by the vast majority of Europeans, our colleges are held in contempt.

The main charges against them are: (1) That they crush out all the individuality of the student; (2) make him a worshipper of traditions; (3) turn our people who are a type, and (4) make the student what is known as a "polley player."

To some extent, all these charges are true. As a rule one can tell a college man by looking at him or by hearing him talk five minutes. In some ways, the college has gone into mass production in competition with Henry Ford, and quantity not quality is the criterion of a successful school.

Also to a large extent, the individual is made to give in to the ideas of the group. If not he is usually made an outcast.

However, these things are necessary to any institution that is part of a growing democracy like ours. We must have mass production if we are to educate enough of our people so that our government may exist in its pure form. The very persons, who cry out against the great number of students, and the equal opportunity they are given, would be the first to cry, "Injustice," if our educational system were more select. The American College is a big growing business institution. It is not the easy going affair of the colleges of the past. The American college is a close counterpart of American life as a whole. The very activity of the university makes it a valuable training. The college has a big task to perform. It must do things in a big way. It may make a few mistakes. A few people may be disgruntled. But the great work of making good citizens of the youths goes on, and it seems to me, goes on rather efficiently.—Contributed.

Fable: Once upon a time there was a man who just loved to pay his income tax and could hardly wait for the payment dates to come around each year.

The final round of the interfraternity basketball tournament is scheduled for Saturday afternoon.

University workmen at Indiana found another task before them yesterday morning when they found a segment of the Kirkwood observatory roof, which covers the large telescope, had been blown off sometime Saturday night. High winds loosened the fastenings of the sliding portion and blew it to the ground, where it was smashed into kindling. No damage was done to the interior or to the apparatus contained inside, because canvas was stretched over the opening to keep out the rains.—Indian Daily Student.

Prof. A. R. Congdon, associate professor of mathematics, spoke to the members of Prof. Roy E. Cochran's methods class on "The Qualifications of the High School History Teacher From the Point of View of the Public School Man."

black ink into their open wounds to cause them to heal with a worse looking scar. The duels must last ten minutes no matter how badly the participants are cut. The decision is not based on the number of cuts but on the technique. However, it is the aim of every man to get as many cuts as possible, as bravery is proved in that way. There are interfraternity duels, but among all duelers the most friendly spirit is felt.

Since the war, the financial condition of the student is very serious. Mr. Mayer tells of many specific instances where university students were forced to beg on the streets of Berlin to keep from starving. The majority of the students work eight hours a day and then attend school. Many sell newspapers and do other menial work. A large share of the most learned professors eke out a living by working nights as waiters.

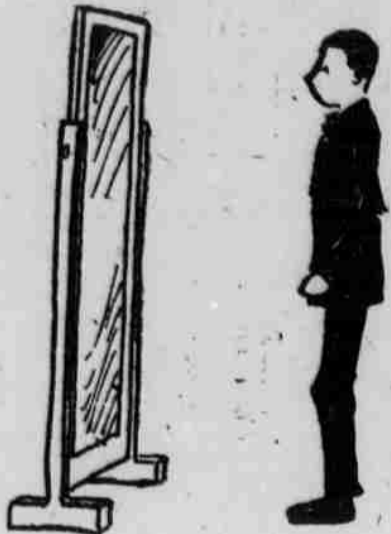

Student discipline is a negative quantity in the German university. All courses are lecture courses and no attendance is ever taken. No examinations are given. At the end of a four year course the student applies for his degree and is then given examinations on all the courses he has had. As a result the German does not really go to school for three years but goes goes to the university to spend money and have good times. He rarely studies until his fourth year, then he crams and memorizes. However, very few degrees are given. The average student gets three years, has a big time, and then "flunks" out.

The stadium at Ohio University, illuminated by hundreds of electric lights, will be the scene of concerts, speeches, pageants, and other evening entertainments in the near future.

The electrical engineering department has begun conducting experiments to determine the number and candle-power needed to furnish the necessary light. Last fall tests were made with a view to installing a loud speaking apparatus by means of which a speaker could be heard easily in all parts of the structure. "With the Stadium costing the University and its friends nearly $210 a day in interest, it should be used for more than a few football games," said Professor Francis C. Caldwell of the department of electrical engineering. "Most people are able to attend entertainments in the evening only. Therefore, it is necessary to provide for illumination. This plan has been followed in very few places so that in our experiments we have very little precedent for a basis."—Ohio State Lantern.
