What Place Does University Night Fill For You?

University Night is less than two weeks away.

What kind of a program appeals to the students?

Is "The Shun" liked by the students and just how far should it go in pointing out the weaknesses of fellow-students and faculty members?

These questions are uppermost in the minds of committees and organizations who are preparing the program for Nebraska's annual stunt night—University Night sponsored by the Y. M. C. A.

Tickets for the program at the Orpheum go on sale this week and this week will see the completion of the subject matter of the skits which are to be given. Now, then, is the time for students to express their opinions on the place which University Night should fill on the campus.

The vital question seems to be—how far shall personalities be allowed to enter the skits. At the outset we must realize that any program which makes sport of some students or faculty members, even though the jokes are all in fun and are exaggerations, will be criticized by some. The committee realizes that it cannot please all of the students with every part of the program.

University Night is the one time during the year when students are supposed to have the right to "play up" the frailties of those about them. It is claimed that more than one conceited person has been cussed by cruel publicity from the press or stage on University Night. But how are we to be sure that we stop at the right place and do not injure reputations by well-meant but untrue statements? In situations have often done a world of damage when the author meant nothing more than a passing joke.

The problem is a hard one to solve. Hardly anyone will champion the abolishment of such time-honored tradition as University Night and the Shun. Ideas to improve these traditions will be printed this week in this column—if you send your ideas to the Nebraska office.

The Pastor says—it is well for a man to stick a pin into himself occasionally to make sure he is the man he supposes himself to be. If someone else is wearing his clothes, he ought to know it.—John Andrew Holmes.

Haven't Nebraska students all learned the psychology of basketball? Don't they realize that the logical time to cheer on a team is when the score stands in favor of the opposing team?

The cage games this week showed the traditional Nebraska spirit at a low ebb. It is no excuse to say that the team is not winning all the time. Let's not let our "fight" run in streaks, but consistently show all our athletic teams that we are back of them to the limit.

It goes to show that the League of Nations question is far from dead when the Nebraska debaters announce as their subject for the coming season the problem of whether or not the United States should enter the association of nations.

Prospects of a debate with some other middle-western college should serve as an incentive for a large group of students turning toward "the thinkshop" in University hall for preliminary work. Nebraska should have more inter-collegiate debates. Not only for the experience which the debaters would secure, but for the good to the school, arrangements should be made to have a series of debates—a schedule such as is worked out for our minor sports.

When Nebraska adopts the single tax plan, serious consideration should be given to the inclusion of debate as an activity worthy of 100 per cent support. The financial problem until then will be a drawback to the development of a schedule of debates with first-rate Universities.

KANSAS HOLDS LEAD IN CONFERENCE RACE

With Woestemeyer back in Suit, Jayhawkers Loom Up as Pennant Contenders.

Lawrence, Kan.—Bulwarked by the presence of Woestemeyer, the running mate of the flashy Roddy of last season, the Crimson and Blue quintet is looking forward to a good race with Missouri on the home stretch, now that the half of the schedule is completed. The first game of the month for the Oreaders will be with the Kansas Aggies on February 7.

So far, the Aggies have been having an unusual portion of ill-luck as far as winning games is concerned. The first blow to their morale came with the loss of the first tilt of the year to Nebraska, 21 to 15, and since then the quintet has entered five more scores on the debit side of the ledger.

Outside of the Mizzou Tigers, the Oklahoma Sooners were the first in the Valley Conference to throw a scare into the pace-setting conference leaders so far this season.

When the wily and altogether-too-lucky Wallace, of the southern quintet, flipped the sphere into the basket in the first thirty seconds of the second period of the game, the Kansas smiled confidently. The score stood 13 to 12. But when he duplicated the performance about fifteen seconds later, Endacott, Jayhawker captain, called time out, and the Sooner really was over.

Ackerman, the sensational sophomore, has been worrying the enemy with his fine floor work and uncanny connecting ability which he has displayed so far this season. Endacott is captaining the team and breaking up rallies around the Sunflower basket with his usual consistency. Black, too, is playing a stellar game at guard.

Bowman, the 129-pound running mate of Ackerman, has not been sinking the ball through the hoop for points as regularly as he might, but his floor work is good. Wulf, at center, is developing in his third season on the Kansas team into a formidable defensive man and an excellent goal-shooter.

Only one team, the K. C. Athletic Club, has been able to give the Kansas the count this season, and the national amateur champions of last season barely nosed out the locals at that. The club took over the Lowe and Campbell quintet last year.

Only two games remain to Kansas to be played on foreign courts—with Nebraska at Lincoln on February 12, and with the Aggies at Manhattan on the twentieth of the month. The other five tilts will take place on the Robinson court.

ishable freight if a severe drop in temperature is predicted with a minimum below zero.

Contrary to what many persons believe, Nebraska's climate is not changing, declares Professor Loveland. Records covering sixty years sustain this judgment. Snowfall, wind, rainfall, temperature, and other weather conditions are the same now as decades ago.

That the weather forecasts are accurate 85 per cent of the time, states Professor Loveland. Persons often regard forecasts as guesses, because a few forecasts have been in error. Misunderstanding sometimes arises from the fact that it is not understood what periods are covered by the forecast. A prediction for the day means from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m., and for the night from 7 p. m. to 7 a. m.

Weather is determined by large areas of high and low air pressure moving in a general direction of west to east. These areas are charted on weather maps published in many daily newspapers. Four to five days are required for an area to pass over the United States. High pressure in the north and low in the south will cause north wind, and vice versa. High pressure at a particular place usually means cold, clear weather, while a low pressure spells rain, snow or bad weather. These areas rotate in a counter-clockwise direction. Wind direction, clouds, and rain or snow are charted on all weather maps. It is from all this information that weather is predicted.

The high-pressure and low-pressure areas enter the United States mainly from the northwest or the north. If it were possible to charter these areas accurately before their entrance, weather could be predicted a longer time in advance. Ships on the Pacific are now sending much of this information, as do stations in Alaska and in Canada. More wireless stations are to be erected near the Arctic circle, and it is hoped that data from them will enable more accurate forecasts.

make it count. Ames took time out. Warren then dropped in a neat one-handed shot from under the basket. Klepser fouled and Greene ran up another point. Roberts was called for holding and Warren made it good. Klepser and Raff were penalized on a double-foul. Both were made, bringing the score to 13 and 14, Nebraska having charge of the unlucky number. Cozier went in for Klepser.

The Husker captain counted a foul from Young, knotting the count at 14. Three more free throws and a basket by Raff brought the Farmers' score to 19. Warren put through two more field goals, making the count 17 to 19. He went the limit on fouls, however, and Coach Frank ran in more freetosses, and made the final score 17 to 21.
