One of the biggest events of the college year has come, welcomed by thousands of University students and hundreds of high school students here for the thirteenth annual high school basketball tournament.

Our visitors have an excellent chance to see the University in action and our hope is that they will make their decision soon to come to Nebraska. The fame of our alumni and of our great undergraduate athletic teams has spread afar and the hope of future Cornhusker fame rests in the thousands of men and women in the high schools which our visitors represent.

Good clean sportsmanship—the motto of Nebraska athletics—will no doubt be an outstanding feature of the high school tournament, as it has been in the dozen preceding contests under the auspices of the University.

No efforts have been spared to provide first-class officials and to eliminate all possible obstacles to smooth-running competition. The contestants will, without doubt, uphold the fine records of the other tourneys and allow nothing to happen on the playing floor that does not typify the best in athletics.

The development of the spirit of fair play and of team work is one of the finest results of the annual contest. Anything not up to this high standard of sportsmanship should not be expected or contended.

Perhaps the greatest change to be noticed on the campus since the 1922 basketball tournament is on the athletic field. Since the championship game of the twelfth tournament, students, faculty members and alumni of the University together with business men over the state have raised almost half a million dollars for a huge memorial stadium for Nebraska.

Work to have the stadium ready for occupancy by the Homecoming football game next fall has begun and is being pushed rapidly with the coming of warmer weather.

The campaign for stadium funds has brought a greater Nebraska spirit to the front. More loyalty to Nebraska and less of factional strife among the students is an accomplished fact. The students have responded in fine shape to the call to put Nebraska to the front among the great Universities of the country.

An event of no little importance in connection with the stadium building is the remarkable way in which the high schools of the state have without solicitation given to the fund.

Hundreds of dollars have been sent to the Alumni Association by the high school students of Nebraska for the great memorial to Nebraska's war heroes. This interest in the growth of Nebraska U. and the Cornhusker spirit is a promising sign of a steady forward advance of the University.
