Inter-company basketball games sponsored by the Military Department this week are another boost to intramural athletics.

Over a thousand men are given the opportunity to practice and compete for places on the teams. With a new and adequate gymnasium, many more of these men would have an actual opportunity to "workout."

A study of the residence of college students by a man from the National Bureau of Education has shown that three of every four students who go to college, attend in their own state.

There is a growing tendency for students to go to their own state institutions.

This movement is hurried along by such action as was taken last week by the Legislature in advancing a bill providing for levying of a fee for out-state students equal to the fee charged by the corresponding educational institution of that state to Nebraska students.

As Nebraska University is noted for the low fees collected from the students, it is evident that if this bill becomes a law, the fees to some students from outside of Nebraska will be raised.

Under the influence of such legislation, the ratio of three out of four will undoubtedly be increased.

With the change of the date of Phi Beta Kappa Day from March until May comes the possibility of having the orator of the day in Lincoln at the time of a proposed Arts and Sciences College Day.

A suggestion that the largest college in the University have a "day" just as the other colleges have a "day" has met with approval.

The coming of a noted Arts and Sciences leader should settle the date for the college celebration.

With other features added to the program of the day, a holiday of real worth this spring could be made the starting of a new custom—one which should endure.

FOR BETTER NEWSPAPERS. Oklahoma will set a worthy precedent for the rest of the nation to follow, if a bill introduced in the upper house of the legislature requiring reporters to take an examination and secure a license before being able to obtain employment on any newspaper in the state is passed.

The idea embodied in the plan is familiar to newspapermen the country over, but the enactment of it as law, besides contributing much to the elevation of journalism to the dignity of a learned profession, would strike at the root of most of the evils surrounding a newspaper, the inefficient manner in which the news of the day is handled.

In the organization of the average newspaper office too little stress is placed on the reporter. Men accede to the position often with nothing more than a high school education, with little knowledge of the social or political problems of the day, and hence unqualified intellectually to write up the news as it should be written.

The salaries paid for reportorial work are in most cases small, and it can be said with a great deal of truth that a man becomes a reporter so that he may acquire a desk position as quickly as the Lord will permit him to.

The passing of laws, such as the one proposed in Oklahoma, requiring reporters to pass a strict examination, and, if possible, that they be college graduates might change matters considerably. Any influx of educated men who had studied journalism as a profession would doubtlessly be attracted to the field.

Through their superior ability they might demand high salaries and reporting might come to be looked upon as something more important than a mere stepping stone to copy reading.

Until the news of the day is written in a fair and elucidative manner by men who have the intellectual qualifications to perform the task, and not in the slothful and inaccurate way of the average, present day reporter, it is difficult to see how the newspaper will ever secure the confidence of the people.

Many editors will probably be opposed to a bill which purports to raise the standard of reporting on the ground that, if passed, the result will be a general raise in salaries.

But a few capable reporters may do the work of many less efficient ones without the loss of prestige which the latter usually impose upon a newspaper through their useless but ruinous blunders.

A newspaper will ultimately gain even financially through safeguarding the integrity and accuracy of the news, and this can be best done by demanding a higher degree of intelligence on the part of the reporters who are entrusted in bringing this about.—Michigan Daily.

Exchanges

William G. Hastings, former dean of the University of Nebraska law college, and for the past year or two a member of the law firm of Hastings, Ritchie and Cannady at Omaha, has been appointed judge in the Second judicial district, to succeed Judge Willis G. Sears, who was elected to Congress at the last election.

Judge Hastings formerly lived at Crete, and was on the district bench in the Seventh district for about 10 years. He also served as a supreme court commissioner for four years and was dean of the law college for ten years. He was acting chancellor at the University when Chancellor Avery was in military service during the war.

The new district judge was not a candidate for the position, according to Governor Bryan. He accepted the appointment Monday morning, and will take up his new duties at once. Judge Sears' resignation took effect Saturday.—The Lincoln Star.

Anticipation of a noonday luncheon prepared by the women of the sophomore class, followed by an afternoon of dancing in Stephens Union will act as a stimulus to the men of the class of '25 in their work upon Charter hill March 17, the date set for Sophomore Labor Day.

As is the annual custom, the morning of Labor Day is spent in making repairs at the "C" and in grading the road which leads up to California's emblem. This work will begin at 8:30 o'clock in the morning when the men will assemble on Sophomore Lawn, whence they will proceed en masse to perform the duties assigned them.—University of California.
