The Nebraska High School Debating League has come to be one of the strongest links between the University and the people of Nebraska. Ninety high schools were entered in the contests sponsored by the League this year. The rapid growth of the organization is representative of the closer relation between the high schools and the state's largest educational institution, which has come about recently.

Some of the most representative and best students of each high school in the League are found on the debating teams. The members of the winning team in each district are in Lincoln today. To them the University extends a cordial welcome and congratulations on their success so far. Whatever the outcome of the debates, all contestants have proved their worth.

It is to be hoped that a larger interest in the work of the Student Council is manifested by the vote cast in Tuesday's election. Although the number of ballots cast was far below the number needed to make the election representative of student opinion, it was larger than for several years.

The utter lack of interest in the work of the council shown in past years is still evidently present in some colleges. An example is to be seen in the college where only two votes were cast. Surely the student elected by this vote cannot feel that he represents any expressed will of the majority of his college.

The small vote in some of the colleges seems to indicate a weakness in the constitution of the council. Should a college which casts only two votes be allowed to have a representative on the student council? Would not another representative from a college casting over five hundred votes or another representative of one of the upper classes have more interest in the welfare of the student government body? Some action to correct the outstanding mistakes in the constitution will be expected soon.

Was there ever a college athletic coach who had at his command all the material to be found in the student body to build his teams? Was there ever a time when he did not want to send out an appeal for men of marked ability who did not train for some form of athletics or one to the student body to make these students realize their responsibility? Football, track, baseball, wrestling, tennis, swimming, and golf contests have been held here this spring within a comparatively few days. In not a one of these sports is all the available material among the students at the call of the coaches. The Ohio student paper offers the following on this subject of concern to every college:

"Coaches of athletic squads here deplore the backwardness of some students in entering into competition for places on the respective squads. They declare the chief reasons for the hesitancy of some students are the lack of that amount of interest as will warrant giving up a certain amount of social activity, backwardness in scholastic work, or the fear of trying out and failing to place.

Coaches of dramatic organizations and heads of other lines of activities find the same situation as do the athletic heads.

Everyone knows of men who have ability in athletics or some other line, but continually refuse to make it available. There is not a scarcity of athletic material or of men for other lines of activity. But there is always room for improvement, and the individual who has the ability is the one who is duty bound to the University to offer his talents.

"Year after year men of meager ability try out for athletic teams, well knowing that their chance for placing is small. They deserve the utmost credit for their attempts.

"Too often men are discouraged on entering a large school because of the large number of men in the competition. In his high school the man may have been the shining light, but is discouraged when he enters a large school and sees the number of men who are competing for places.

"It is the duty of men who have marked ability to offer themselves. It is the duty of the student body to make them see the responsibility."

Dean LeRossignol Home from Trip to Cincinnati, Ohio

Representatives of all the leading schools in the country were at the recent meeting of the Association of Collegiate Schools of Business at Cincinnati, according to Dean J. E. LeRossignol of the College of Business Administration, who attended the meeting and was chosen a member of the executive committee of the Association.

One of the most interesting discussions of the meetings dealt with the course of study of the University of Cincinnati. This course requires the students to do apprentice and practice work in various business firms in the city and requires a five years' course for the bachelor's degree. In general, says Dean LeRossignol, the plan of the University of Nebraska has been confirmed by the experience of other institutions; that of laying stress on economic theory and general studies, especially the social sciences, as the bases of business training and practice. Members of the Association paid a visit to the great plant of Proctor and Gamble Soap Company, called Ivory-dale.
