Plan to stay for commencement. The whole program for the Cornhusker Roundup is completed and reports of it have been sent to the thousands of Nebraska alumni and ex-students. Too often undergraduates do not read the part of the program which follows Ivy Day, organization banquets, and the commencement baseball game. They do not plan to stay for the splendid Sunday program and for the commencement address and exercises.

The commencement address and exercises will be especially worth-while this spring. They form the climax of the entire Roundup celebration. All students who want to become well acquainted with Nebraska traditions will plan to stay for commencement.

While the whole University will await with interest the speech to be given here Saturday by President Meiklejohn of Amherst, students and faculty members of the College of Arts and Sciences will be especially anxious to hear the noted educator.

Saturday might well be designated Arts and Sciences Day and students of that college will do well to make an extra effort to hear the address of the eastern president. President Meiklejohn will come as the Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Xi orator, thus recognizing the honorary national Arts and Sciences organizations. With Dean Philo Buck recently returned to take active charge of the college affairs, the mother college may set aside Saturday as one to review the purposes for which it was established and the ideals toward which it is constantly striving.

The plan to strictly limit the number of "closed nights" during the next school year has some real advantages and yet the door should not be too closely shut. No doubt there have been times when nights have been barred unjustly to all except one student activity. The student body is too large to be accommodated at many of these functions. The abolishing of these "closed nights" is to be commended. But there are a few University customs and traditions which should be continued with a doubt. The general opinion may be that if these cannot live without having a "closed night" set aside for them, they are not popular with the students and therefore do not need to be continued. But there are always hundreds of students each year who have had no opportunity to become acquainted with these customs and who do not realize their importance to the school. Let the new rule operate, then, to uphold these customs and traditions even at the expense of a liberal interpretation of its purpose.

The art of correct reading is something which any student should be more than glad to acquire. A majority of college students do not make the most of their reading opportunities; they spend many hours thumbing the pages of the latest short story magazines, special preference always being given to the magazine that runs the worst trash in its columns. On the other hand, there is the college grind, a somewhat rare specimen these days, who devotes his spare reading time to a perusal of the weightiest articles on file in the library with never a thought of adding a trace of variety to his education by reading a throbbing novel of the Canadian northwest.

Even with the arduous scholars who read the long dry passages of the standard works, there must at times be a craving for a short snappy story. No special harm can come from reading a red hot story right off the press provided it is not taken seriously; people need a little something to add zest to the monotony of their existence. Still, the person who spends practically all his time reading detective stories, the scandal sheets of the newspapers, and books that have been suppressed is doing himself a great deal of harm. There is a danger that the reader will take such material too seriously. It is necessary to examine light fiction with a critical eye. The ideal reader concentrates on the best work in the field of literature, but he keeps before him the ever present aim of improving his education by reading upon a variety of subjects.

There is an ever increasing tendency on the part of students to ignore the best literary works for absolute trash. The fault lies in the home training and secondary school education which the student receives before coming to college. The desirability of appreciating fine writing is under emphasis by him. The student of today must realize that while lighter fiction may be read occasionally, it should not comprise the basis for an education.—Michigan Daily.

BIZAD GIRLS TO CLOSE YEAR WITH BANQUET

Commercial Club Will Conclude Activities at Final Dinner Thursday Evening.

A banquet for all girls of the Business Administration college will be given by the Girls' Commercial Club Thursday, May 17, at the Woodburn, 425 South Fourteenth street. Tickets may be secured from Mildred Polnick, B1025. Guests are requested to arrive at 6 o'clock in order that the dinner may begin promptly at 6:15.

Ruth Small, retiring president of the club, will act as toast mistress. The toast list has been carefully arranged, and the committee promises responses of general interest. Dean and Mrs. J. E. LeRossignol will be honor guests of the club.

The banquet will conclude activities of the club for the year. This is the second year for the Girls' Commercial Club, and material advancement has been made in accomplishing its purpose of fostering friendship and cooperation among the girls in the College of Business Administration. Monthly dinners have been held at Ellen Smith Hall under the direction of Mary Lococo. Several business women have talked before the club during the year. Membership has increased with the growing interest in the program it offers.

GARDNER ELECTED TO N CLUB PRESIDENCY

Officers for Coming Year Are Chosen at Luncheon for Letter Men.

At a meeting of the N club at the Chamber of Commerce Tuesday noon, Maurice Gardner was elected president for the coming year. Other officers elected are: Dave Noble, vice president; Howard Turner, secretary and treasurer; Joe Pizer, sergeant-at-arms.

The N club is composed of men in the University of Nebraska who have won a letter in any one of sports. It has become a very active organization on the campus, promoting the various athletic events during the school year. It has charge of the high school basketball tournament, the interfraternity events, and the state high school track meet. This year the N club is publishing the Tales of the Cornhuskers, the year-book of Cornhusker athletics. Each man in the club appoints himself as a committee of one to see that all the promising athletes in the state come to the University of Nebraska.
