

SCHOOL OF JOURNALISM ORGANIZED BY REGENTS

Prof. M. M. Fogg Is Director of New Department—Fourteen Courses Offered.

Although organized formally by the Board of Regents on the 22nd of last May, the new School of Journalism at the University of Nebraska will, in fact, begin its career with the first class of this semester. Director M. M. Fogg, professor of English and chairman of the University Publication Board, has been charged with the direction of the activities of the school.

The inauguration of the School of Journalism brings to the University of Nebraska a co-ordination of activities in the field of journalism heretofore lacking; under the new regime fourteen courses in journalism for a total of thirty hours' credit applies toward the Certificate of Journalism with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Eighty-two elective courses in related departments are suggested as particularly pertinent to journalistic study, by the first bulletin of the School which appeared Friday.

The larger recognition of the journalistic field at the University of Nebraska comes in response to the activities of the Nebraska Press Association, tending toward a higher rating for the profession of journalism. Now, with the revision of the four-year course so as to permit specialization, practical training for work in the Nebraska journalistic field will be given a great impetus.

The enlarged facilities of the University printing plant, together with opportunities for the students of journalism to enter actual newspaper work on the campus publications, combine to furnish the School of Journalism with excellent laboratory advantages. It is planned to make

The Daily Nebraskan an experimental and training publication for the benefit of journalistic students.

Professor Fogg, the first director of the School of Journalism, began his work at the University of Nebraska in 1901, after receiving degrees from Brown and Harvard universities. He has taught courses in journalism at the university since 1915. As a staff member of the Asbury Park, N. J., Daily Press, special correspondent of the Associated Press and the United Press, and for various metropolitan newspapers, and manager of the University News Bureau, Professor Fogg learned the practical side of journalistic work. The highest recognition nationally of Professor Fogg's success in the newspaper profession came with his appointment by the army educational commission, Professor John Erskine of Columbia university, chairman, as director of the College of Journalism of the American Expeditionary Forces in France, in 1919. In appreciation of his services in that capacity, the French government conferred upon Professor Fogg the Palmes Academique, carrying officership in the French Academy.

The faculty is composed additionally of Chancellor Avery, Dean P. M. Buck, Prof. Roy E. Cochran (American History), Prof. R. F. Crawford (Agricultural Journalism), Prof. S. B. Gass (English), Prof. E. L. Hinman (Philosophy), Prof. J. E. Lawrence (Journalism), Dean Warren A. Seavey (Law), Prof. J. P. Senning (Political Science), and Prof. G. O. Virtue (Economics and Public Finance).

The correlation of the activities of the 185 students from two colleges in the several phases of journalistic work at the university and fifty-eight students registered in the four-year curriculum for the certificate in journalism has necessitated an enlargement of the space arrangements. Accordingly U-111 has been converted into a reading room for the convenience of the students of journalism; contemporary examples of the leading metropolitan journals will be placed at the disposal of the students there. In addition, this room will be used for conferences between the members of Director Fogg's critical staff and the students enrolled in the various journalistic courses.

Collected stories, representing the several fields of journalistic thought, will be filed in this room subject to special class reference work. The classification of this material has been proceeding all through the past summer at the hands of Director Fogg's assistants, and under his close supervision.

The former lone classroom of journalism, U-106, will be continued as an accommodation for the members of the advanced courses. Magazine and newspaper racks are to be placed here for the use of students.

With the assembling of new study tables and other equipment, the enlargement of facilities, and the re-organization of the various journalistic interests into a promising School of Journalism, the newspaper profession at the University of Nebraska enters upon a new era.

TUITION CHARGES ARE INCREASED THIS YEAR

Fee Varies From One to Five Dollars Per Credit Hour Under New Plan.

A tuition fee on the basis of the credit hour is an innovation in the financial methods of the university this year. The old flat rate of five dollars a semester has been discarded and a new charge of from one to five dollars a credit hour is made. This fee is one dollar a credit hour in most academic courses which do not carry laboratory work. The fee is two dollars per credit hour in laboratory and certain professional courses. In the professional colleges it varies from three to five dollars per credit hour.

A registration fee is charged the student each time he registers. Fees of one and three dollars respectively are charged for change in registration and for late registration.

The minimum non-resident fee for students who have matriculated in the college attended since August 3, 1923, is fifteen dollars. The law passed by the state legislature states:

"This fee shall not be less than the fee charged to residents of Nebraska for a similar course of study in a corresponding institution of the state in which such non-resident has his home." The exact amount of the non-resident fees will be determined when application for entrance is made to the registrar.

A copy of the revised schedule of fees may be obtained at the office of the Registrar by any student.

Persons wishing to rent rooms to rent rooms to University men are asked to call at the University Y. M. C. A. Rooms for women should be listed at the office of the Dean of Women. Five hundred nine rooms to accommodate 854 men had been listed with the Y. M. C. A. Wednesday morning. Rates vary from $6 to $12. One thousand ninety-six rooms were listed with the Y. M. C. A. last year.
