WIN OR LOSE—OUR TEAM.

Over two thousand Cornhuskers marched to the station yesterday to give the football team a send-off. Coaches and the captain remarked about the wonderful display of spirit. Although not looking for a reward, surely every Cornhusker felt that he was more than repaid for the trip to the station.

In sincere and lively speeches, men heading the invasion into the Illinois camp, expressed themselves as being more than pleased with the showing made by the students. But, as Coach Schulte warned, be there to meet the team at its return. Win or lose—it is our team.

Be at the Armory tomorrow to watch the returns on the game. This is novel and arranged for your benefit.

BRICKLAYER OR PROFESSION.

In this period of history when industry is upset, when there seems to be a world of injustice about us, when men are even suspicious of one another, writers with a ready and capable pen express their thoughts in the very key that every one has tried to touch.

The following clipping is taken from the Indianapolis News:

When chances for a social revolution in the United States were discussed recently by a group of men, Charles M. Schwab said:

A bricklayer I know of has a daughter who wants to study Greek. So her father went to the Greek professor of a local college, who lived next door to him, and asked if he would give lessons. The professor consented and discussing the charges, said he would not be exorbitant, demanding only the same amount per hour of tuition as his caller received for laying bricks. But the other couldn't see it at all, and flounced out in a huff.

A steel manufacturer, who had risen from the ranks, saw the lack of balance in a situation that had caused a bricklayer to believe that a Greek professor's efforts and contribution to society were not so valuable as his own. The bricklayer may have been of the school that thinks a college professor is incapable of doing anything else. One of the largest corporations of its kind, seeking a man to fill one of its most important administrative positions, found him a few years ago in an Indiana college—and he was a professor of Greek.

Engineers, architects, chemists, ministers, in fact all in the professions, make a contribution to society that may not always be visible, but which is not less valuable than the work of any business man or craftsman. Bricklayers and all other craftsmen are essential and to be most highly regarded if their work is as it should be. But so are college professors and other professional men.

ONE MISSING FRIEND.

There is one figure who is missing from the Armory this fall, one name that is no longer heard, as it was heard for years and years in connection with every mention of gridiron activities, and one football team which has gone to a foreign field without his benediction.

That figure is always missed, but the opening of the football season reminds us the more poignantly of our loss since his name was so inseparably connected with the team.

Surely his memory lives to bless. The rare devotion that he exemplified, the indomitable spirit and optimism that was his, and, finally, the kindly man himself are memories that we may well cherish. His bowed form, his snow white hair, and the "N" which he wore, challenged attention and commanded the respect that was always his from the student body.

The Scarlet and Cream still mourns the passing of Jack Best, Nebraska's most faithful old Cornhusker.
