CHRISTMAS VACATION.

Four thousand Nebraska students are going home today for the holidays. Included in these students are fifteen hundred freshmen. While these freshmen are home they will be judged by their neighbors and friends who are closely watching to see how college has affected them. According to the way that these students act, their friends, parents, and neighbors will be judging Nebraska University.

If these students go home filled with a sense of their own importance, thinking that because they have gone to college they are a little bit better than the people back home, that fact is going to count against them. But what is more important, such actions are going to hurt Nebraska University, and colleges in general. The friends and neighbors will say to themselves, "If that is the way Nebraska University brings up our sons and daughters, none of my children will go there."

If, on the other hand, the student goes home, filled with the idea that he is now no better than when he went away, filled with a deeper respect and admiration for home town people and institutions, he will help the University. People will be pleased with the University because it has not made the student conceited or self-centered, but has broadened him and made his appreciation greater.

Truly, students should watch their actions while home for the holidays, and remember that the University as well as themselves are being judged by their actions and general behavior.

A release from the strenuous routine of scholastic duties is offered students by the Christmas vacation. Those among us who are overworked will have an opportunity to rest our mental faculties and restore our intellectual alertness. The most of us will not take advantage of this opportunity as we should. Instead of resting during the vacation, we will be celebrating, and in the end we will come back to school to rest up.

An editorial suggesting that a University musical organization put on a road show was published in yesterday's Nebraskan. The idea was explained, and the advantages of such a practice were outlined. The Kosmet Klub of the University has long desired to put on such a road show as suggested in this article, but the University authorities have ruled against it. Along this line, however, the Klub is to present its annual production in Omaha again this year. The authorities will allow the show to go to Omaha on a week-end, but will not permit the Klub to put on the show when it would interfere with school work.

While home for the holidays, University students have an opportunity to boost for the University that should not be overlooked. "Selling Nebraska" should be one of the aims of every student during the holidays at home. Talk Nebraska to your high school friends, outline the advantages to be obtained by attending the Cornhusker institution, and encourage them in every way to plan on attending Nebraska University, the home of the Cornhuskers.

"The Messiah" will be presented by the University Chorus under the direction of Mrs. Raymond in the Armory at 10 o'clock this morning. All classes have been excused so that students may hear this great oratorio. Every student is urged to go to the Armory this morning for this service. University students who fail to attend such services as "The Messiah" are not taking full advantage of the educational opportunities offered by the University. Nebraska spirit also demands that the Cornhusker student support this traditional service.

But the appeal to loyalty should not be necessary to fill the Armory for the presentation of this impressive service. The desire of the student to make the most of his University career, to broaden and develop his appreciation of art and music, should be enough to cause him to attend this oratorio.

Forty-five students from Nebraska will attend the Student Volunteer convention at Indianapolis next week. The convention will discuss internationalism, industrialism, and other great problems of the day. Doubtless each delegate from Nebraska will learn much of importance at the convention. They will come back to Nebraska bigger and broader students, more capable of meeting the daily problems of the University campus.

SETTLED.

Some time ago the Daily published an editorial in which the Notre Dame football team was congratulated upon its conduct at Nebraska; at the same time the action of certain of our hosts (and this term naturally included the citizens of Lincoln) was deplored. The feeling that our team and coach had not been properly treated by certain individuals, during and after that game, was not alone the opinion of the editorial writer—it was the general opinion on the campus.

But the splendid manner in which Coach Dawson and others at Nebraska replied to this editorial, surely removed any bruised spots in the hearts of Notre Dame men. The tone of these replies was so gentlemanly, so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of good-will toward Notre Dame, so sincere and so indicative of the high type of men who student them, that as a whole our student body's doubts and fears were set at rest. The ties between Nebraska and Notre Dame were inseparably cemented by the sentiment expressed in that heart-felt phrase, "Notre Dame, we are sorry."

Oh, Gracious! Aren't we glad we can go home and live off the folks for a while.

Now Mr. Rockne, in a letter to the Daily Nebraskan, has denied the facts which caused our student body, before Nebraska's explanation, to be sorely aggrieved. And when Mr. Rockne says such facts did not exist, we take his word for it, because he is in a position to know. Mr. Rockne has settled the matter.

Nebraska, we are heartily sorry for having imputed imperfect hospitality to any of your students or to any of your fellow townsmen.—Notre Dame Daily.
