place they have merited; and that the judgments of opinion that alone endure, from which alone no mortal can escape, are equitable soon or late."

"At this hour in Washington, the last rites are being solemnized over all that is mortal of Woodrow Wilson; his spirit has joined the immortal dead and his name is already enrolled among the great ones of the earth. It has been said of him by one who knew him well 'that Woodrow Wilson, the apostle of peace, the lover of mankind, will live forever, influencing the destiny of civilization yet to come; that out of his sacrifices and sufferings, borne with such superb dignity and with such sublime courage, the good he sought to do for humanity will inevitably be realized,'" said Dr. Fling.

Dr. Fling then spoke of the league of nations, conceived by the late president and for the success of which he lost his health and went to his grave.

When he first advanced the idea of the league, Dr. Fling said, "he was not aware of the difficulties of the task before him. 'It is to America,' he said one evening, 'that the whole world turns today, not only with its wrongs, but with its hopes and grievances. I know these ancient wrongs are not to be remedied in a day or by a wave of the hand; what I seem to see with all my heart—I hope I am wrong—is the tragedy of disappointment.'"

Most popular college sport

"As I look back on my college days," said the old grad, "it strikes me there were more men playing blind man's buff than all other games combined. I understand this is still the case.

"Get me straight. It was no child's play. What we were groping around for was pretty serious business—nothing less than a career.

"Too many men are in the dark as to what they will do after graduation. Either they neglect to specialize in anything, or hastily select a major which they afterwards regret.

"I know I would be considerably ahead in business if back at college I had sat down for a few hours' earnest thought to find out just what work I liked best—and then gone in for it heart and soul.

"Pick the thing that appeals to you, and don't let them tell you that particular line is overcrowded. Talk this over with graduates you know. Talk it over with your professors. Talk it over with the industrial representatives next Spring. Most of all, talk it over with yourself.

"The main thing is to get on the right track and to keep going. There's no fun in being 'It' in the game of life, with every change in fate ready to push you off an uncertain course."
