AN EDUCATIONAL PROBLEM.

President Burton of the University of Michigan has asked for the removal from campus life of "many things that should turn red with shame the faces of any decent man or woman."

A splendid editorial in the Lincoln Star discusses this problem. The editorial follows:

THE RETURN OF CHIVALRY.

Marion Leroy Burton, president of the University of Michigan, occupies a unique position among educators. Dr. Burton is not in appearance, action or a word a typical educator. A brilliant student and scholar, and one of the best known and most deeply respected college heads in America, Dr. Burton impresses one as a business man, whose daily contact is with industry and the problems connected with it.

There is food for thought in his recent address to the students of the University of Michigan, in which he presents a plea for removal from campus life of "many things that should turn red with shame the faces of any decent man or woman."

He asked for a return of chivalry. "You students are lazy. You loaf, you gamble, you spend week-ends in big cities, and then you wonder why we don't want you here. We must have student who are men. They must believe in honesty, decency, must be chivalrous, must respect themselves and be industrious. We must wisely bring back some of the chivalry of the middle ages."

Dr. Burton is concerning himself with the same problem which has attracted the attention of a large proportion of the educators of this country. Possibly chivalry is hardly the name for it, although there is plenty of evidence in everyday life that his charges have too much foundation in fact. Everywhere, however, there is ample proof of a growing disrespect among those of the student body in the colleges and universities for the more precious and sacred things of life.

It has its inception in disrespect of parental authority. The first lessons in discipline and reverence must be learned in the home. If father and mother cannot or do not command respect from their children, certainly the chances outside of the home are doubly diminished. It is not to be believed, however, that this younger generation is any better or any worse than those which have gone before. If anything the tendencies against which Dr. Burton voices a protest are the result of dereliction of the parents in not demanding more of their children. They want them to be free of unnecessary restraints, and to enjoy themselves to the fullest extent. They do not insist on obedience with the stubborn insistence of fathers and mothers of a quarter of a century ago, because in so many instances they are too busy with other things.

In this fashion disrespect first originates.

That young men and women should scoff at the sacred ties of life, that they should secure a false impression of the value of convention and tradition, that they should seemingly feel no pressing need of spiritual regeneration or exhortation is not surprising. From the days when they are supposed to prattle at their mother's feet, or on their father's knee, they are missing the inspiration of examples in the home.

Upon the already heavily-burdened shoulders of the educator, a new responsibility has been thrust. In the absence of the proper training in the home, the teacher is expected to assume responsibility for the moral and civic training of the youth. He is expected to impart in the youth a reverence for old age, a deep abiding instinct of chivalry towards womanhood, a love and reverence of those things in life which are dearest to the

HE WAS. "There will be a board meeting at the close of the sermon," announced the preacher after an extremely lengthy discourse. But at the meeting he noted that a strange young man had remained.

"My dear man," said he, "Are you one of the board?" "Indeed I am," he responded.

CURRENT REMARKS. "Hello, old top," said the new spring lid.

A flivver student is probably one who makes a low grade.

hearts of all in those rare minutes of reflection. It is a stirring call, which faces the educators of this country. They long to mold boys and girls into the proper kind of men and women. The ideal which is thus held forth tugs at the heart but it is a heavy responsibility and the teachers need the help of fathers and mothers in a larger measure than they are now receiving.

Dr. Burton is quite right when he says there needs to be a return of the chivalry of the middle ages. There can be no such return, however, solely through the efforts in the class rooms in the schools and colleges of this country. It must originate at the fire-side of millions of American homes.

COMMITTEE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR DEFICIT.

The Junior-Senior Prom committee has decided to make the affair informal. In view of the recent discussion in the Student Opinion column of the Daily Nebraskan, it is only fair to state that there will be no class deficit because of the Prom and no assessment to make up any deficit that might arise.

The committee that is in charge of this function is personally responsible for any deficit that might arise. There is a University ruling which provides that any deficit shall be made up by the committee that is in charge of the event. All of which makes it impossible that the classes will be held responsible.

The party will be held May 10 and will be in the nature of a spring party with special decorations and attractions. Underclassmen will probably be admitted, with the juniors and seniors as sponsors for the affair.

a very vital thing, and the production of artistic material may in time be an end to which the tremendous potential energies of our most capable citizen may be directed.

If we are to have a civilization of small money grubbing men who might otherwise be much more profitably employed than in making a living so large that its very surfeit deprives them of the opportunity to live, it would seem that something of this sort must be done. Oberlin, we believe, has pointed one valuable way.

DRAMATIC UPLIFT.

We have at hand a report of a dramatic tour of Oberlin students. It appears that the Oberlin Dramatic association covers some 2000 miles on tours and visits many cities to present in conjunction with local dramatic associations, mostly guided by Oberlin alumni, the latest and best which modern drama affords. This means that the ordinary Rotarian citizen may see the works of Shaw, Galsworthy, and Dunsany presented by students who can present them excellently.

Incidentally Oberlin does not fail to profit through presenting fine works in an exceptionally fine manner. Oberlin is coming to be regarded as a college from which much worth while material goes forth every year, material which is in people's minds intimately connected with dramatic productions of unusual calibre.

But even greater in potential effect is the introduction to common men and women of the Middle West the greatest plays now being produced in a world which knows far too little of the brave things of soul. Art, the Middle Westerner can become

The smaller the hat, the better the style this spring.

The close-fitting hat that emphasizes the shape of the head and the curve of the neck is the hat that fashionable women have adopted for all the informal hours of the day.

Mary Pickford, for instance, wears a snug fitting felt hat with up-turned brim when she goes to the dock to see friends off on the Olympic. And the very small hat does for her what it does for all women of her type—accentuates her youthfulness and calls attention to the delicacy of her features.

The Best Business Career

is what every ambitious college student and senior is thinking about at the present time. Life insurance is one of the best, one of the most desirable, and one of the most satisfactory as a permanent calling.

In assets and volume of business, life insurance is one of the three leading businesses of this country, yet the field is comparatively undeveloped. Only seven per cent of the economic value of all lives in United States is covered by insurance. This gives you an idea of the big field still to be developed.

As to REMUNERATION, reports of college graduates who have entered business indicate that life insurance is at the VERY TOP as a SOURCE OF INCOME. Now is the time to consider what you are going to do at the end of the semester.

If you are ambitious and willing to work hard and are interested to know about life insurance as a vocation, address the LINCOLN LIBERTY LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Lincoln, Nebraska, or call in person at 305 Ganter Building, 12th and O Streets.
